Life Drawing 101

Lisa Araujo Davis

California Polytechnic State University - San Luis Obispo
The strange man standing over there by the vending machine, eyeing you, doesn't understand the significance of your breasts and collarbone, doesn't memorize the geometry in the swing of your walk and keep it like the artist does who knows your breasts are cylinders your stomach, a sphere your shoulders, a box—who knows how they fit together and shift with gravity beneath your clothes, beyond your skin—
not the way the strange man goese beneath your clothes to watch your nipples in the cold; no, this is different because he doesn't understand that they are merely bows tying the package off, that they're a period
at the end of a long sentence of ribbons weaving themselves in and out as your hips change angle as each leg bends up and forward, how this affects the angle of your shoulders, how you glide so easily into equilibrium.