New Lampshade Design
Made at Cal Poly
Free to All Students

Lampshades designed to eliminate glare from Tom's 100-watt lights. The California Poly designs are free to all those in student residence halls.

All have been forwarded on these lamp shades since a recent request from the President of the California Poly Lampshade Association, a group which in collaboration with the Poly Design office offer a new type of shade to eliminate glare. These new shades are free to all at the dormitories of the Poly residence halls.

A Conference of California Poly students has been held to determine the best style of shade to be selected. The conference was called by the Poly Lighting Engineer, who set forth the problem and selected the design that was chosen.

The shades are designed to give an average of 100 candle power for each person who lives in the dorms. This is the best average that can be provided.

Ingenious Bell Rings
Old Man Education a Winner
Students Make mistake

An ingenious device, an electric bell, has been built by a student in California Poly dorms. The bell is a miniature electric bell that rings every time a person makes a mistake while learning properly.

A tractor is used to drive the train around the campus. According to the inventor, Dr. Charles Figgs, welding instructor, the tractor was designed to eliminate glare from the lamps in student residence halls.

Spring Lambing at Poly Nearly Ended; Crop Shows Decline

Spring lambing at California State Polytechnic is nearly finished, according to Loomis Benedict, main editor of "The Polytechnic," of which he is editor-in-chief. Only 16 or 26 ewes remain to lamb, the lamb crop. Benedict reported, is not quite as high as last year. The ewes were purposely kept low last year because of the discouragements of the California State fair, where the lamb crop was replaced by the state fair marketing day.

The sheepfarms and herdsman with lambs are looking forward to next year's lamb crop. There will be more lambs to show at the state fair. Los Angeles county fair, and to the state fair, of which the Polytechnic lamb shows are a part. Several lambs were lost because of trouble from dogs. These may dip the lambs, apparently not for food but merely for the joy of killing. Severa are feeling out lambs for this spring, many. These are not to be dipped. The Polytechnic lamb shows are an annual event and are always well attended. The lambs are judged on their appearance and quality. The Polytechnic lamb shows are open to the public and are always well attended. The lambs are judged on their appearance and quality.
