Ag Teachers Conference Draws 450 Delegates

The 17th annual meeting of the California agricultural teachers to convene on the Cal Poly campus will begin Tuesday, June 28, and will continue on the following Saturday noon. A total attendance of 450 ag teachers is anticipated for the conference, according to Agriculture Education members, and a number of social and athletic events will be slated for the visiting educators.

A number of conferences pertaining to agricultural topics will be the mainstay of the meetings. Poly faculty members and outside speakers will be present to address the conference during the 6-day period. The purpose of the conference is to provide the teachers with a greater understanding of their profession and teaching methods.

Ag teachers will be the closing dinner guests for the annual poly teachers workshop, which is held each year on Campus. The department and faculty, whom have been invited to address the conference during the 6-day period, will give the teachers an opportunity to observe how teaching is conducted in other schools.

Undergrad Pranksters Temporarily Trap Faculty Revellers At Spooners

As we saw in the movie, "The Lady Comes to Castaways," how do we get rid of the pesky instructors who make us work too much? Well, that's exactly what the pranksters did at Spooners this past week. They managed to trap the faculty members in the restaurant and put a few of them back in their places.

The pranksters used a unique trap that involved setting up a barrier in the parking lot. The barrier was made of a series of large, inflatable balloons that were filled with helium. The balloons were arranged in such a way that they created a maze, making it difficult for the faculty to escape.

The pranksters then invited the faculty members to a special event at Spooners, promising them a great time. Little did they know, they were being lured into a trap.

When the faculty members arrived, they were greeted by the pranksters and led to the barrier. As soon as they entered the maze, the balloons began to deflate, trapping them inside.

The pranksters then took pictures and videos, documenting the faculty's reactions to being trapped. The photos were later shared on social media, causing quite a stir.

Despite the pranksters' best efforts, some of the faculty members were able to escape. However, many were left regretting their decision to come to Spooners.

The pranksters' prank was not without its consequences. They faced criticism from some members of the faculty, who felt that their actions were inappropriate and unprofessional.

In the end, however, the pranksters were able to turn the situation to their advantage. They were able to gain publicity for their cause and even raised awareness about the challenges faced by students in the current academic environment.

The pranksters' actions were a reminder that, even in the age of digital communication, the power of a well-executed prank can still resonate with a wide audience.
All CCAA Baseball Team Announced

California Poly's Mustangs, pre-season favorites to capture the California Collegiate Athletic Association baseball championship, may not have lived up to expectations in the won-lost column, but they monopolized the all-conference first team, with four men named in selections announced today.

San Jose State, named two of its first-teamers, and College of Pacific selected three. Cal Poly, which was expected to place in pre-season balloting, failed to achieve premium space at Poly is a never

Campus Printing Department Plans Summer Extension Service

An extension course in printing on a college level has been established at California State Polytechnic college, A. M. Fellows, director of printing announced today.

The course is designed to meet the needs of veterans who have used up their on-the-job training privileges or those who were promoted to journeyman status in their absence during the war. Its aim is to increase the employability of the veteran.

The program got under way on June 28 and continues through the summer for a period of 18 weeks. The students will receive instruction in linotype maintenance, linotype operation, advanced typography, presswork, stereotyping and the other basic skills of the printing industry. All applicants evaluation themselves of this opportunity must have had some previous experience in the industry. Fellows pointed out.

First Extension Course

This is the first time that this program has been offered at Cal Poly, and it is believed that it has been offered in a course ever been offered in California on college level.

"If this service proves successful, it is our plan to adopt it as a permanent extension of the instructional program of this department to be conducted in the fall of this year. In the manner we will be better able to serve the people of California, for there is a definite need of college trained men in the graphic industries in this state," Fellows added.

New Equipment

Additional equipment to be added to the department includes a model II Blue Bird (foottype).
