Leadership conference set for Oct. 14 in Chumash

Students and club members interested in strengthening and developing leadership skills for college or career are invited to join LEADS (Leadership Education and Development for Students) at the Extravagant Leadership Conference 10 a.m.-2 p.m. Oct. 14 in Chumash Auditorium. Professionals and industry trainers will conduct more than 30 leadership workshop sessions, and meet and talk with students at a closing reception, where students can also distribute their resume.

Pam Harris, coordinator of LEADS, said, "This conference is a great opportunity for students to start the school year off by developing skills for the future." Students who attend the conference will learn how to run an effective meeting, motivate others and build teams that produce results. The workshops will reinforce existing skills and help students to become effective leaders in their organizations and their communities.

The Extravagant Leadership Conference is open to all Cal Poly students. Because space is limited, students are encouraged to register early. For more information and a registration form, visit the LEADS Web site at www.leads.calpoly.edu. Students can also register in the Student Life and Leadership office, UU 217.

For more information call Harris at ext. 6-2582.

Statistics Dept. advises on research, data analysis

The Statistics Department provides a statistical consulting service to help with research design and data analysis in a variety of areas. The service is intended to support faculty and students and projects, as well as to help students with senior project and Honors theses.

Robert Smidt, the main consultant full time, can advise on data collection, experimental design, and analysis of research projects. He is also available to lead seminars and tutorials on requested topics and advise on computer packages available at Cal Poly. If some special area concerning statistical inference is of interest to a department or group, contact Smidt to arrange lectures on the subject.

The Statistics Department asks those interested in using the consulting service to please fill out the online form on its Web page at www.calpoly.edu/stats. The site also has additional information, including what to bring to the consultant.

Smidt's office is in Room 111 in Faculty Offices East. He can be reached at ext. 6-2001, via e-mail at smidt@calpoly.edu, or fax at 6-2700.

Educational policy expert to talk Nov. 14

Stanford University professor of education and well-known art and educational policy expert Elliot Eisner will be the featured speaker at the Fall 2000 Educational Policy Symposium on Nov. 14.

His talk, "Can Current Reform Efforts Give Us What We Need," will be at 4:30 p.m. in Chumash Auditorium.

At the core of Eisner's teaching and research interests lies the belief that art might offer teachers both a powerful guide and a critical tool, according to Carol Barnes, advancement director for the University Center for Teacher Education.

Eisner says that the "idea that teaching in more art and science has implications for both the practice of teaching and for its evaluation." Originally trained as a painter and designer, Eisner's academic research now focuses on the development of aesthetic intelligence and the use of critical methods from the arts for improving educational practices.

Eisner taught about the practical use of critical qualitative methods from the arts for the description, interpretation and evaluation of classrooms and teaching processes.

"For me, the ultimate test of a set of educational ideas," Eisner said, "is the degree to which it illuminates and positively influences the educational experience of those who live and work in our schools."

He has taught at Stanford University since 1970, where he has published more than 300 articles and chapters and 15 books. Cal Poly's third Educational Policy Symposium is designed for all public school teachers and administrators as well as Cal Poly students interested in educational policy issues.

"Because Dr. Eisner will focus his talk on the recent spot of standards issues in the State of California as well as the efficacy of testing to standards in the schools, this presentation should be of special interest to teachers and administrators at all levels of education," said Barnes.

The Educational Policy Symposium is sponsored by the University Center for Teacher Education and the Political Science Department.

For more information call Barnes at ext. 6-5934.
Fermat's theorem topic of Oct. 12 talk

Professor Michael Mossinghoff from the Mathematics Department at UCLA will give a talk titled "Fermat's Last Theorem: As Easy as ABC!" from 11:10 a.m. to noon Oct. 12 in Room 220 in the Math and Science Building.

The talk will be targeted for those with knowledge of calculus and familiarity with polynomials.

French mathematician Pierre de Fermat's famous "last theorem" states that there are no solutions to the following equation: $a^n + b^n = c^n$ in positive integers $a$, $b$, and $c$ when $n > 2$. Posed by Fermat more than 360 years ago, the statement was proved only recently by Englishman Andrew Wiles.

The study of problems like this one belongs to a branch of mathematics called Diophantine analysis. In his talk, Mossinghoff will introduce the subject and talk about Fermat's life. He will then go on to discuss what is currently the most important open problem in the subject, the abc conjecture, and talk about its relation to Fermat's last theorem and other problems in Diophantine analysis.

For more information, call the Mathematics Department at ext. 6-2206.

Carnegie Foundation's "Centennial Celebration"

To commemorate Cal Poly's Centennial, we have begun a new column that will include a chronology, history, upcoming Centennial events and additional tidbits that we hope you will find interesting. To allow for breadth and depth of material coverage, "Centennial Celebration" will be published only once a week starting Oct. 11. Each column will be devoted to the history of the subject, people who have made the greatest contributions to the discipline, the development of the discipline, the groups that have contributed to the climate of the discipline, or other issues of interest.

For more information contact Barnes at ext. 6-5934.

UU Club 221 to showcase self-portraits
Club 221, the gallery in the UU, will showcase a variety of self-portraits by student and faculty artists in its first exhibit of the academic year, Oct. 13-Dec. 8.
The show, titled "What's in a Name?," will feature studio art ranging from paintings and drawings to collages and sculptures, audio art, such as spoken testimoneis, and written self-expression.
The gallery is accepting student and faculty members' entries through Oct. 6. Entries may be dropped off at the gallery from noon to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. All students, staff members and board members involved in the UU are invited to a special ASI sneak preview at 7 p.m. Oct. 11.
As artists' receptions, open to everyone, is scheduled for 7 p.m. Oct. 13. Club 221 is also planning several "after hours" events such as readings, conferences and concerts.

Tambours du Bronx to perform Oct. 11
Tambours du Bronx, a group of 20 percussionists in the style of "STOMP!" will appear at 8 p.m. Oct. 11 in the Performing Arts Center's Cohan Center.
Tambours du Bronx mixes the street sensitivities of "STOMP!" with the spiritual qualities of Taiko drumming. Using ax handles and huge oil drums as their instruments, the company creates a sound described as both musical and primal.
Tambours du Bronx (Doomvers of the Bronx) is from the Bronx of Nevers in the center of France, but their inspiration comes from New York City's Bronx -- a working-class borough.
Tambours du Bronx has released several recordings and has performed at festivals throughout Europe. The group has toured extensively in Austria, Germany, Switzerland, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom. This is the company's first North American tour.
