Final Exams Start Thursday, July 18

With a prediction by college officials of a twenty per cent increase in enrollment over last year for the six-week term which gets under way July 22, students are preparing for final examinations which will conclude the four-week term July 18-19.

All final examinations for the four-week term will be given during the last week of the term, which will not meet Saturday, July 21.

At a meeting last week, new students planning to enroll for the second term were informed that they will take their examinations at the same time as the returning students, September 21.

Guidance testing of new students for the four-week term of the current summer quarter will start the Counseling Center at 8 a.m. on July 19. All guidance testing of new students will be completed by August 2.

Women Writes Note of Thanks to Unnamed Cal Poly Student

Cal Poly had one anonymous moment for the home-community relations field today. It was accomplished by a named member of San Luis Obispo community in the person of Mrs. A. M. Smith, who wrote the following note: "Next time you park, please put your parking ticket on your windshield and not in another car before it is stopped. There is a blank spot on her car when she returned to her car.

Mr. and Mrs. and the college to know that I am grateful for his thoughtfulness."

SLO Churches Continue Leadership Emphasis

San Luis Obispo churches continued an emphasis on youth leadership this week when Rev. William R. Brewer was announced as new minister of youth for the First Baptist Church. With continued growth of Cal Poly, several of the churches have added special youth areas.

The Rev. Brewer has been active in church youth work in southern California through the functions of the First Baptist Church at Twin Peaks. He has assisted in several activities for summer camps and has recently purchased a home at Santa Maria Carlos Street.

He says that Armageddon is as near as tomorrow, and that "It is necessary to get ready for the battle, for tomorrow is round the corner."

Economic Survey

Dr. Grace McPhail, who first attended Ohio State University where she received her Bachelor of Arts degree, completed her Doctorate at Columbia university. She worked in the field of psychology. While at Harvard, she was appointed to assist with economic survey, a project which later became known as the Harvard Center for Research. She is now the director of the American Institute of Research.

Bright Future For Farm Careers
Says Dean Shepard

The dean of the west's largest agricultural school, took more than a little pride today with statements that farming opportunities here in California have never been better.

"Last year," says Shepard, dean of agriculture, "all agricultural colleges in California graduated only 230 students. This year's class will graduate 300 students, 25 per cent more than in the past, and one graduate for each 1,500 farms.

The average age of California farmers today is 46 years, and in 10 years, someone must take over. And those who operate farms that in California have an average $50,000 to $100,000 capital investment must be trained to handle that kind of responsibility. To compete with the efficiency of large farms, this hobby-type management, the smaller farmer must devise his own college-trained, management through the faculty.

The situation in California is only part of the national picture, minister says, when he cites the following figures: "The Land Grant Colleges and the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture states that we need 1,500 new farmers every year in industry. Jobs in industry, teaching, research, extension, foreign service are available to all of these. Only 230, all graduates of the Junior College of Agriculture here, and the Polytechnic College in Los Angeles, could meet this demand in the U.S. That would mean only 1,800 farms. Yet we had only 1,000 graduates in all our schools last year; and only 18 per cent of these graduates went into farming jobs.

"Actually," says Dean Shepard, "there's an extremely bright future for agricultural college graduates—in industry, only 10 per cent of those who are college-trained are entering agriculture. There are job opportunities in production and related agricultural industries."

Fourth Doctor Is
Latest Addition To Health Center Staff

Dr. Clifford Walker has joined the health center staff of Cal Poly. He came from Half Moon Bay, California, where he was engaged in private practice for seven years. He did pre-med work at Fresno State college, received his M. D. degree at George Washington University, Washington, D. C.

In an interview with an El Mustang reporter, Dr. Walker said that in planning to come here he expected to enjoy the community service in private practice which he had to enjoy. "In private practice," he said, "one can enjoy working with young people, very stimulating work."

"We have been told that there are very good schools here in San Luis Obispo and that is another reason we came here," said Dr. Walker. Another reason he left private practice was to be able to enjoy more time with his family. "The rewards of community service in private practice are wonderful," said the doctor, "but we don't have time to be with our family, which is very important to him."

Dr. Walker hopes to enjoy here at the West's largest agricultural college the sports of sheep and horse raising and gardening. Dr. and Mrs. Walker recently celebrated their fourteenth wedding anniversary.
