How About Refunds?

Barry, Byr

I am a student at California Polytechnic College, where until recently, when the student body was comprised largely of men, parking was a major problem. In the fall of 1962, it was announced that all students would be required to purchase a permit in order to park their cars on campus. This program was introduced as a means of raising funds for the maintenance of the parking lot, which was in desperate need of repair.

I, along with many other students, purchased a permit for the fall quarter, only to find that the new parking regulations were not enforced. The lot remained overcrowded, and cars were frequently towed. I was angry and frustrated by the situation, and I decided to take action.

I contacted the administration and expressed my concerns. However, they informed me that the parking regulations were not being enforced because of financial difficulties. They claimed that the money collected from permits was not enough to cover the costs of maintaining the lot.

I believe that the administration should be held accountable for their promises. When we purchase permits, we expect them to be enforced. The parking regulations were announced with the intention of providing a solution to the problem, but they have not been effective. I urge the administration to take the necessary steps to see that the regulations are enforced.

Editor's Note: The above letter is a response to the parking regulations recently implemented at California Polytechnic College. The writer expresses dissatisfaction with the enforcement of these regulations and suggests that the administration should take action to ensure that they are followed.

We're Here To Learn

A meeting of the Hardened To Learn class was held last week. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss a recent incident that occurred during a laboratory exercise. The instructor, Dr. J. Smith, was scheduled to conduct the experiment, but he was not present due to a prior commitment. As a result, the students were instructed to proceed with the experiment on their own.

The students were divided into groups and were given instructions on how to conduct the experiment. However, they encountered several difficulties. They were unable to assemble the equipment properly and were not able to follow the directions on the lab manual.

The students expressed their frustration with the situation and requested that a more experienced instructor be available to assist them. They suggested that the lab manual should be updated to include more detailed instructions.

WASHINGTON REPORT

Political Activity Increases

Although 1964 seems like a long time away, for several political publications it is important. The 1964 election cycle will be upon us before we know it, and the candidates will be busy with their campaigns.

The candidates for the upcoming election will be seeking the support of the voters. They will be making their arguments and presenting their platforms to the voters. The voters will then choose the candidate whose platform they believe is the best for the country.

It is important for the voters to consider the candidates carefully. They should look at the candidates' platforms and decide which one they believe is the best for the country. They should also look at the candidates' track records and see if they have been acting in the best interest of the country.
