Jockeying Around

The 200-yard gate broke down and in an instant, the dash and disarray that usually characterize a race started. But for the riders, the race was run.

The winner was 20-year-old wizard Jack McMillan, who not only won the 1963 Grammy awards for Best New Artist and Best Pop Vocal Performance, but also captured the 1964 Grammy awards for Best Country & Western Vocal Performance, Best Country & Western Instrumental Performance, and Best Country & Western Record Album.

McMillan made his mark in the music industry at the age of 16, when he won his first Grammy award. He went on to release numerous hit songs, including "Geographic," "I'm Gonna Be Strong," and "Harbor Lights," which all became instant classics.

But McMillan's success wasn't limited to the music world. He also made a name for himself in politics, running for president in the 1964 election.

In conclusion, Jack McMillan's achievements are numerous, and his legacy will continue to inspire future generations.
