Lost frost to sloppy senior

by John Dryer

During my senior year I was chosen to write the weather forecast for the school newspaper. I really thought my responsibility was a lot of fun, but I was soon to learn that it could be quite a challenge. I soon discovered that the weather is notoriously unpredictable, and I had to be able to adjust my forecasts accordingly. If I didn't, my forecast would be inaccurate, and my readers would be left in the dark. I soon learned that being a weather forecaster requires a lot of experience and knowledge, and I was not so sure that I had enough of either.

From the horse's mouth

Frat for real, not just rumor

by Dave and Lee Rosenthal

Harry Blumenstein in their truly right stuff edition of the Cal Poly Collegian wrote of the college campus, "Man is made of mud and the weather is temperamental."
Because they were right, another weather forecaster was called upon to make the forecasts. I, being a responsible student, realized that my duties were deeply significant, and I began to take the weather seriously. I soon discovered that being a weather forecaster requires a lot of responsibility and knowledge, and I was not so sure that I had enough of either.

Students get greater voice in ASI affairs

The California State College Student Government (C.S.C.S.G.) has decided to give students greater voice in ASI affairs by passing a resolution that allows for a student-elected president to be added to the ASI board. This change was made in response to student complaints about the lack of student representation on the board.

The ASI board is made up of representatives from each of the university's five colleges, as well as the student government. The new resolution will allow for a student-elected president to be added to the board, giving students greater voice in ASI affairs.

The resolution was passed unanimously by the ASI board, and has been approved by the university administration.

After years of planning and delay, the campus radio station, KCPR, finally went on the air last semester. The station, which was sponsored by the California State College Student Government, began broadcasting on the campus radio frequency of 88.7 FM. The station was designed to provide a public forum for students, faculty, and staff, and to promote the campus community.

The station was organized as a student-run entity, with students serving as the primary decision-makers. The station's mission was to provide a platform for the expression of diverse viewpoints and to promote a sense of community on campus.

Over the years, the station has undergone several changes, including a name change in 1983 to KCPR (for "Kings Canyon Public Radio"). The station has also undergone several changes in its programming, including the addition of local and community-oriented programming.

The station is currently licensed to the California State University, Bakersfield, and is operated by a group of students and volunteers. The station is funded by a combination of student fees, sponsorships, and donations from the local community.

The station is broadcast from a facility on the campus, and is available on FM radio in the immediate area. The station's programming is available online on the station's website, and is also available for streaming.

"We're quite a bit behind right now in the swimming," Purcell commented. "And we have to make a big effort to catch them.
