Arabs and blacks face similar problems?

While a student from Israel told a gathering of the Third World Students Association about his country's struggle for liberation, a number of students here are beginning to think in terms of a struggle that is as much theirs as it is the Arabs' or blacks'.

On Sunday, a group of students here was asked to protest the Israeli-Arab War as a move to deal with the problem of black unrest on campus.

"There is a great concern that exists between Arabs and blacks. It's the same struggle, two different fronts."

The only way to end this struggle, she continued, "is to establish a 'bunch of blacks' in the Middle East."

That's if the leftists themselves, she added, "we only have to see more and needed blacks will be destroyed."

In a letter to students Monday, Dean A. B. Marston reminded black students, Arab students, and black and Arab friends to remember the findings of the 1970 Joint Task Force.

"The Joint Task Force, which was established in 1970, had a number of recommendations which we should all remember, "he wrote. "One of these was that a black and Arab student should be included in the joint task force."

"If we really want to fight for black and Arab rights, we should be fighting for the joint task force to be re-established and its findings to be implemented."

"Of course, we should all remember the findings of the Joint Task Force, "he continued. "These findings are the only way to deal with the black and Arab problem."
Faculty behind times

The last sentence in last Monday's editorial was as follow:

"...but apparently this hasn't come true."

"...but apparently this hasn't come true." is not a question. It is a statement. The correct sentence should be:

"...but apparently this has not come true."
Madness followed him home

A cluster of voices swelled as the crowd at first there was a momentary lull, but then there was a rush. "What's the rush?" "What are you doing?" "What's going on?"

Then the voices rose to a crescendo as a new round of voices echoed through the room. "What are you talking about?" "What do you mean?" "What's happening?"

The crowd was in a state of confusion, unsure of what was happening and what to do next. They looked around, trying to make sense of the situation, but no one seemed to have a clear answer.

Eventually, the voices quieted down, and there was a moment of silence as the crowd tried to process what had just occurred. Then, suddenly, someone spoke up with a clear and confident voice.

"What are you waiting for?" The crowd looked at each other, then back to the speaker. "It's time to act. We need to take action and make a change. We need to fight for what we believe in."

The crowd nodded in agreement, and they began to move forward, determined to make a difference. They started to organize, to plan, to strategize. They knew that they had to act now, that they couldn't afford to wait.

It was a moment of clarity, of purpose, of determination. The crowd was united, ready to take on whatever challenges came their way. They knew that they could make a difference, that they could change things if they worked together. And so they did, moving forward with a sense of purpose and resolve, ready to face whatever lay ahead.

The next day, the crowd gathered again, this time with a renewed sense of purpose. They were ready to take on whatever challenges came their way, to make a difference and to fight for what they believed in.
