New bibliography published

A new bibliography by Ilene Rockman has been published by the Cal Poly Library in the library's Bibliography Series. The title of the recently completed bibliography is "Sex Role Stereotyping in Children's Literature: A Selective Bibliography."

According to Miss Rockman, a reference librarian in the library's Learning Resources and Curriculum Department, the Bibliography Series started about a year ago to make the library collections more accessible. She said the series is an ongoing one that continually needs updating, and all books listed in it are available in the University Library.

Hers is the second in the series, she said. The first is titled "Collective Bargaining in Higher Education." Another, presently being compiled, is on the Presidency of Andrew Jackson. Miss Rockman said the series is compiled by library staff members as part of their responsibilities. She said a staff member chooses a subject of special knowledge and interest and compiles a bibliography for the series as time is available.

The new bibliography was announced in the April, 1980 issue of "Resources in Education" by the national Clearinghouse on Reading and Communication Skills of the national Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC). It will be available on microfiche at more than 600 libraries and information centers across the nation which subscribe to the ERIC collection.

A federally-funded program operated by the Cal Poly Foundation under contract with the U.S. Department of Labor, HEP assists youths from migrant and seasonal farm worker families in preparation for the General Educational Development (GED) examination.

During their stay at the university, HEP participants attend special classes in such fields as mathematics, science, grammar, literature, social studies, and career education. The goal of the program is to place its graduates in jobs, job training programs, or college or university study. It is one of 14 such programs in the nation.
