Elderhostel program

Cal Poly will join over 300 colleges and universities across the country when it hosts its first Elderhostel Program. During the week of August 17 to 23, 50 citizens, 60 years of age or older, will be coming from nine states, including California, Colorado, Florida, Maine, Nevada, New York, Pennsylvania, Texas, and Washington, to attend three special courses offered by the Extended Education Office.

The program is coordinated by Philip Bromley who taught agricultural management at Cal Poly for 26 years before retiring. The Elderhostelers will stay in a campus residence hall and will be able to attend three workshops during their stay: “How to Publish Your Writing;” “Agriculture for the Eighties;” and “Hearst Castle —Inside Out.” The courses are offered on a non-credit basis.

In addition, the hostlers will be able to engage in a wide range of campus activities, including swimming, handball, tennis and bowling, and special events are planned for each evening during the week. Since this is Cal Poly’s first Elderhostel session, the one-week course was limited to 50 persons. This filled quickly and a waiting list formed. Poison prevention stickers

Approximately 75 percent of all poisoned children are under five years of age. In an effort to help parents poison-proof their homes and educate children about poison, “Officer Ugg” has been developed as a symbol upon which parents can build an active home safety campaign. “Officer Ugg” stickers can be obtained free at the Public Safety Department, Building 74. After you receive the stickers, go through the house, garage and tool shed and put an “Officer Ugg” sticker on each poisonous item. Everyday products like cleaners, medicines and cosmetics are but a few places where stickers can be placed. “Officer Ugg” stickers have been found successful in telling children, even those who cannot read, not to taste, touch or smell these items.
