Industrial Technology
New Accreditation Received

Accreditation of the Bachelor of Science Degree program in industrial technology offered by Cal Poly has been announced by the National Association of Industrial Technology (NAIT). The announcement came from Clint A. Bertrand of College Station, Tex., chairman of the association's National Board of Accreditation. He said the period of accreditation for the Cal Poly program is four years, the longest initial period permitted by NAIT regulations. The industrial technology program at Cal Poly is one of 14 degree programs in the university's School of Engineering and Technology and is one of three degree programs offered by its Industrial Technology Department.

Robert G. Valpey (Dean, School of Engineering and Technology) said the NAIT accreditation culminates more than two years of preparation by faculty members. The accreditation helps to assure current, former, and future students of the Cal Poly department that the courses and programs are relevant to the current needs of the nation, Dr. Valpey pointed out. The Industrial Technology Department, which is headed by J. Mac McRobbie, has 325 students enrolled in its bachelor's degree curricula in industrial technology and bachelor's and master's degree programs in industrial arts, including 140 industrial technology majors.

Announcement of accreditation of the industrial technology curriculum by NAIT brings to nine the number of Cal Poly engineering programs which are accredited by national professional bodies. The eight others are all approved by the Engineers Council for Professional Development.

NEW DEBATE TOURNAMENT RESULTS

The University of Southern California dominated final standings of the first annual Pacific Coast Invitational Debate Tournament which took place at Cal Poly on Saturday and Sunday (Nov. 23 and 24). The new tournament replaced the University of California at Santa Barbara Invitational, usually held on those dates. The 1974-75 national debate topic is "Resolved: that the power of the presidency should be significantly curtailed," was employed at the tournament.

Senior Division debate was closed out when four teams from USC reached the semi-final round of competition and were awarded a four-way tie for first. Pepperdine University of Malibu and American River College of Sacramento both advanced to the final round of competition in the Junior Division by winning their elimination rounds. In the final round of competition, the American River team defeated Pepperdine University at Malibu.

A total of 32 teams representing 9 colleges and universities entered the competition at Cal Poly. In addition to those already listed, they were from University of Redlands, Loyola University of Los Angeles, University of California at Santa Barbara, and Modesto Junior College.

NEW MASTER'S DEGREE APPROVED

Final approval for establishment of a Master of City and Regional Planning Degree program has been received by Cal Poly according to an announcement by President Robert E. Kennedy. Approval of the program was received from the Office of the Chancellor of The California State University and Colleges. It will be offered by the School of Architecture and Environmental Design beginning with the 1975 Summer Quarter.

George J. Hasslein (Dean, Architecture and Environmental Design) said the two-year master's curriculum in city and regional planning has been designed to accept students from a broad range of disciplines who are interested in careers in planning. "We expect to prepare graduates for professional work with public agencies and private industry involved with the planning of the physical environment and to prepare graduates for careers in teaching and research," Dean Hasslein continued.

The new master's degree program is described by Dean Hasslein as one that will use a broad and integrated approach to data collection, analysis, decision making, and programming to solve existing and future environmental problems. With a strong foundation in planning theory and law, the program will stress a balance between theory and practice and place special emphasis on regional planning and the problems of rural areas and small cities.

Dean Hasslein called the new curriculum "a logical extension" of the bachelor's degree program in city and regional planning which has been offered at Cal Poly for the past seven years. "Since planning is a multidisciplinary subject, our new graduate curriculum will complement several other undergraduate programs, particularly those in architecture, architectural engineering, landscape architecture, social sciences, and natural resources management," he added. With more than 1,400 students and a faculty of 80, the Cal Poly school is one of the largest in the world.
