Season features top music from marchers

Students will be making a big splash the 11th straight week as the Mustang Marching Band queues in for another series of practice sessions as possible.

For the 11th straight week, the Mustang Marching Band will put on a half-time performance, is one of the major pageantry events of the game. The show begins with the 7:00 Century Fox Fanfare followed by a drill routine to the theme from “Fiddler on the Roof.”

“Scriptmaker, Scriptmaker,” with the band forming a fiddle and then a movie projector as the music switches to the theme from “Goldfinger.” The show ends with a routine to “Blitz” and the theme from “Summer of ’42.”

The head picks up the political theme Oct. 7 when they perform “Revolution ‘71,” with tunes such as “I Feel the Earth Move,” “Go, Dams Gambolin’,” and “Proud Mary.”

Events surrounding marching will revolve around the theme “Sign of the Times,” giving the band a good lead up to the Oct. 21 program at halftime. A melody of signs and songs will include the five circles of the Olympics, the happy face with “Make Me Happy,” and others.

In addition to the at-home performances, the Mustang Marching Band members will head for Fresno Oct. 14 to play a major part in the Stanford-Bulldog band.

Band members are not music majors, according to Johnson, since Cal Poly has no major in music—Students fit the six to seven hours of practice each week in among their academic subjects for two units of credit. (Students interested in joining the band may wish to contact Johnson at 948-7934 for information.)

Known as the “Pride of the Pacifist,” the band has a national reputation for its dynamic performances. Their style, Johnson said, is one of basic pageantry with precision drill and dance steps worked into each piece.

Figures show small increase in registration

Headcounters discovered that 26 more people made their way through the Thursday and Friday registration process this year than did a year ago.

The figure of 12,147 enrolled students is expected to increase, however, when late registration begins today, according to Don MeCabe of Information Services.

At the end of the Fall Quarter normal registration process last year, 12,137 students were registered and by the end of the quarter the number had increased to 12,179.

Projection figures showed a planned enrollment of 12,500 this quarter. About 1,500 students are enrolled in the school of Agriculture (the first-year school) with the school of Engineering coming up a close second with 2,200 enrolled.

Industrial Arts boosted the largest percentage increase (241.8 per cent), growing from last year’s 28 to the present 133.

“Most action will take two weeks, as an item moves from discussion to business, but so does Foley,” DeGroote said.

“Basically, he sounds like he wants to have tight control of the meetings,” DeGroote said.

“Can that mean he wants to see things run smoothly or does it mean that not too many viewpoints will be represented, which leaves him with a lot of power,” Johnson said.

John Johnson said the new policy will cut down time spent in needless repetitions of points already made.

“The elected representatives have the authority to speak for all the students. There have been some doubts expressed, but I think I’m protecting the right of people to speak,” Johnson plans to hold public hearings on controversial issues before limiting discussion to representatives only.

DeGroote, along with several other students, thinks Johnson has overstepped his authority. “I don’t want to see him just cutting all off everyone. I hope he’ll put it to a vote of SAC and they’ll decide SAC should make their own rules.”

Johnson also plans to restrict the agenda and the way business is conducted.

After the minutes of previous meetings are approved, he will call for approval of the agenda, at which time additions can be made under the heading “discussion items.” Following approval, the meeting will be limited to those items on the agenda.

Most action will take two weeks, as an item moves from discussion to business, but so does Foley,” DeGroote said.

Johnson hopes this will give representatives plenty of time for research and debate before an item comes up for a vote. Subjects that need immediate attention, however, will bypass the two-week process.

Montana State fails, but so does Foley

by ERIC NOLAND

In an awesome display of defensive power and offensive punch, the Mustang football team rolled over Cal State Hayward 60-0 in the season opener, then followed with a 36-7 thrashing of Montana State University here Saturday night.

In both contests it was the defense that amassed everyone, allowing a two-game total of only seven points.

The opposing quarterbacks ended up spending a lot of time running when they wanted to be passing, as the Mustang front four rolled up a sack of crowd-pleasing pacts. The relentless pressure helped the new secondary pick off several passes in both games, and forced the visitors late three fumbles Saturday.

The implored victory over Hayward did not seem very astounding to those present, as the Pioneers were badly crippled by graduation in June and had intended to use 1973 as a rebuilding year. However, an early season stop in San Luis Obispo found their foundation all but leveled.

I finally registered as a senior this quarter, ahead of 6,000 or so underclassmen. As I drove to school, I couldn't help thinking that finally things would go right for me and I wouldn't have to worry about my schedule.

I stood in line under the broiling sun half an hour early, checking the close-out board with some assurance that I wouldn't find any of my courses up there—after all, I was actually registering early for the first time since I came here three years ago.

But I should have known something would go wrong. Two sections of the English course I wanted closed as I walked through the line of monitors. I picked out another section, at a time I didn't really want and with a teacher I knew nothing about.

I promised myself I'd take two courses in physical education sometime this year, mainly because they're required. It says somewhere in the catalogue that you should be through with P.E. by the time you're a junior, but somehow I never could get the classes I wanted or felt I could physically do.

But I was lucky this time. I discovered a section of bowling that was still open-right in the middle of one of the courses I had already pulled a card for, of course; I took it anyway, dropping the other class.

I finally emerged from the Men's Gym an hour after with a vastly different schedule from the one I had sketched out the night before. I paid my fees and went home for the weekend, knowing that I had probably fared better than most of the students who struggled through the quarterly registration process.

I walked into my first class Monday morning, only to sit there while the instructor said that most of us were probably in the wrong course.

Though I distinctly remember reading the catalogue description and thinking, 'That's just what I need.' within the space of a few minutes after the class began I decided that maybe the teacher was right—I didn't really belong in the class. I'll have to admit he made it easy for us. He taught another section that just happened to have some space in it, so half the class trudged up to his desk and switched courses.

I'm almost afraid to try my classes today. I don't think much else can go wrong. But you can never tell.
Week of Welcome: it worked!

Week of Welcome changed its goals and activities this year and made a successful bid for existence, according to Gary Kimmel, WOW chairman.

Nine hundred new students took part in the pre-school activities that were designed to acquaint them with San Luis Obispo and university life.

"There have been over 1,000 students, but that was three or four years ago," said Kimmel. "Since then there hasn't been a decline as the rath, rath spirit declined. Last year there were only 400 students."

The diminishing popularity of the program threatened WOW with bankruptcy and questions from students such as, "Is student orientation worth supporting?"

"We had developed a program that only 400 people wanted. It just didn't meet the needs of new students," said Kimmel. So the student counselors began working on a new structure last year.

In the past WOW has stretched over 10 days, with students paying $30 to spend half the time on campus and half at camp in Cambria. There was a great deal of competition between the camp and campus factions and the main activities were games and campfire singing.

"It's different this year in that we didn't have two factions, camp and campus. We combined all our energy into a three-day program that cost $15, with an optional camp program at the end of the week," Kimmel said.

"We tried to develop a program that meets the students' needs. Before it took too much time and too much money."

The program this year assumed a more educational air, though the same camp songs and previous jobs were around. Counselors made more of an effort to fill in students about registration, instructors and courses to take.

"We think it went over really successfully," Kimmel said. "This was a new thing, so we couldn't say 'this is how we did it last year.' Everything was shaky and we had problems, but it turned out really well for a first time."

Tours and meetings familiarized the students with the campus and the departments they will be taking classes in. A walking rally of the downtown area introduced them to the community.

One of the first activities for the 900 students and 134 counselors was an "invitation to thought." Rev. Bruce Tjadan, from the Campus Christian Center, with a great deal of humor, spoke of Disneyland and the fantasy world that one lives in while there.

But the university is a piece of the real world, he said, and students should think about why they chose to come to the university and what they expect to find. A torch parade to Poly Grove followed, with plenty of time for discussion and thought while groups roamed marasmallows around campfires. A dinner, barbecue, beach party and a day sliding down hills on cardboard sleds and listening to War's Hey in Poly Canyon provided more time for talking and cementing friendships.

One hundred and forty-five of the students along with 80 counselors attended a two-day camp at Cambria Ocean Plate. There was only one complaint. "There aren't enough girls here," said an aspiring Romeo. But you can't really blame WOW for that, when the campus ratio is two men for every woman.

In that game, Mustang tailback Mike Foley continually displayed his unique, galloping running style as he raced Inside, outside, and around and over the Hayward defenders. When the numbers were tallied at the end of the afternoon, the San Pedro speedster had picked up 134 yards in just 13 carries, an effort that gained him “Offensive Player of the Week” honors.

Mike Foley, who electrified the crowd with his break-away runs in both Mustang football outings this season, tore into the defense in his knee injury in the second quarter of Saturday night’s game. He will be out for the season, according to a team spokesman.

It was an impressive drive that had the home fans sitting up, however, Foley injured his knee and did not see further action in the game. The junior tailback underwent surgery that night and will be lost for the season, according to a team spokesman.

in plaza

by NICK SABO

Registration was sparked with a bit of political campaign bickering Friday morning in the CU plaza when Congressman Burt Talcott was hurled by his 14th District Democratic challenger Julian Camacho.

Camacho accused incumbent Republican Talcott of neglecting the campus, firing a foray of questions which the Congressman preferred to ignore.

Talcott shook hands with students and then abruptly left for a press conference scheduled 40 minutes later. Camacho stayed and talked with students for more than an hour.

"I was here and was willing to debate with him about the war, the environment, and the coastal initiative," said Camacho following Talcott’s departure. "But the man doesn’t want to debate."

"He claims to be a friend of the student. He was here and he ran. He won’t face up to the people and tell them why he’s voting the way he is.

"He said he doesn’t believe students should be included in minimum wage. I’m for this,” Robin Baggett, ASI president, called Camacho’s intrusion on the campus a gross discourtesy.”

"Talcott came to visit the campus and he was met by a planned disruption,” Baggett said. "Camacho wanted a confrontation for the publicity."

"At the press conference Talcott told reporters, “I’ve got a position on every single issue. My record is published for everyone to see. People know exactly what my position is.”

"From then on the offense merely stretched out their lead as the defense held the visitors to nothing and pursued a triple-option attack well and ran for two touchdowns in the fourth quarter.

The first score in the final quarter was set up when Dave Quirk fell on an MSU fumble deep in Bobcat territory. The partisan fans cried for a touchdown and got it as Pettas went in from the four.

The second touchdown started out as a field goal. Pettas, in to hold for place kicker Mike Guerra, dropped the snap from center. Picking it up, he began to scramble to his right. Seeing no room there, he wheeled back to his left, found 22 yards of daylight on the sideline and got into the endzone for six more.
