FROZEN FUNDS

Day Care fate cloudy

by Liane Lucieetta

The decision to freeze $8,000 for a campus day care center has been postponed by Student Judiciary.

A "Complaint, Petition or Petition" was filed by Greg Williams, a Student Affairs Council representative, requesting that the Student Judiciary file an injunction to hold up use of all funds for the financing of Cal Poly Children's Center.

Former ASI vice president Marianne Dods said that the (student) child care center policy was not prepared to defend themselves. She asked for adjournment till a later date.

The grounds for complaint were "that pertinent information concerning day care center alternatives were withheld from the SPC by the Student Affairs Council. A policy is an unfinished item from the past year’s SAC and there were questionable procedures taken on both policy decisions concerning the center."

Most of the discussion centered around the questionable procedures clause. Larry Alcorn, who called "the high priest of anti-creationism," asked which bylaws or sections were violated.

Williams said Article 39, Section A of the student constitution states that, "An initiative shall be held within 90 days of the receipt by the SAC of a petition signed by at least 20 percent of the voting membership of the SAC and a precise amount for each higher education system, according to Brown.

The formula of funding for the State University and Colleges is established at an amount equal to the actual number of full time equivalent students enrolled in the prior fiscal year multiplied by 89 percent.

If the measure had been enacted for this current fiscal year, the bill would have generated an additional $4 million and slightly above the current level, according to Hay.

Opponents argued that the bill would not allow for an annual review of the program. Hay said.

The preliminary hearing on the bill was scheduled for December 6 in the College Union Room 216.

Scientists support case for divine intervention

by ROBIN NIEFIELD

Creationism - fact or fiction? Was the earth made in six days? Or did the immeasurable pluses of time plus chance somehow "get it all together" without any divine intervention? Is there a need for divine intervention at all?

Hank Noyd once said that science is "an act of faith," and last Friday another estimated two hundred people gathered to hear the science proclaim that the "99 percent" doesn’t even believe in evolution.

"Genes usually do not change," said Dr. Donald Chittick, a professor of natural sciences at Los Angeles Baptist College, who called "the high priest of anti-creationism." Dr. Chittick presented the idea as a project at this year's campus day.

As an avid theater-goer, a professional journalist, and a novice scholar of Shakespeare, I must take issue with Joan Campbell's review of the Cal Poly's Speech Department's presentation of "King John." It is customary for a drama critic to comment on all aspects of a production, including the author's script, the failure to comment on William Shakespeare's efforts, Mrs. Cambell indicates a possible lack of knowledge on the subject. Shakespeare was first and foremost a playwright, and as such his prime concern was entertaining the audience, not relating historical facts. However, many of his "historical" plays are also highly entertaining. "King John" is not one of those dramas. It is not a particularly good play and it is noticeably less so when compared to the productions of his "historical" plays.

Therefore, if a viewer is entertained while watching this play, it is the direction, the production and the performances that must be credited. I had the pleasure (yes, pleasure of attending both the Friday and Saturday night presentations. The total effect both nights was most enjoyable and I am grateful. I may herein applaud a difficult play well done.

Believer: try to refute Bible

I would like to reply to Peter Martinson's charges that Christianity is non-intellectual, and that it is not a subject to be dealt with at the college level. Peter, if these charges are true, then it should be easy for you to historically deny the central point of Christianity—the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Also, if you feel that Christianity does not appeal to intellectual thought and logical reason, please read "Revelation and the Bible," edited by Carl Henry and "The New Testament Documents," edited by F.F. Bruce. If you still aren't convinced that Christianity can intellectually maintain itself in a college environment, please try to refute the Bible archeologically.

But Peter, if you are one of those who jokingly discard Christianity without investigating it thoroughly, please read 1 Corinthians 1:18.

'F' does not stop students

Editor:

Regarding your article "Archie wins," Nov. 16. It was most amusing, please present something to find out that even though a student may get an 'F' grade, for a design major this may not always go ahead and win a major international competition. It is also gratifying to find out that foreign students can still represent this school and for that matter this country in such competitions.

My congratulations to Mr. Bertoli from Argentina and Mr. Ariascorreta from Mexico for their successes. If I could only say congratulations to their instructor who failed them for such a project?

'we can control lives'

Editor:

Last week we read a sermon by our beloved editor in how we, as students, are going to get screwed over. We are going to be forced to shell out vast sums of money to take care of a few broke some freaks on campus had the misfortune to beget.

Then, keeping up with our illustrious paper, we heard a point by point rebuttal from someone who was involved with the organizing of the Day Care Center. We found our editor reacting hysterically to a proposal that would see it to that our children, society's children, would be properly cared for in those formative years when their characters are so drastically developed.

In Kahilien afraid we might divert some of the funds, such as we pay for our porn porn girls, to something as petty as caring for a bunch of kids?

It seems that there are some people who are completely satisfied with the status quo and are terrified by the prospects of change. To those I would suggest they pull their heads out, from wherever they may be, take a look around and react progressively towards a better world. Yes, believe it or not, we can change our lives if we act with our minds and not simply react.

Branson: human killer
by Rick Goulart

The talents of Charles Bronson and director Michael Winner (Chato's Land) now team again with their latest effort "The Mechanic," playing locally at the Fremont. It is an entertaining expose of the animality of murder within the Mob by an all to human hit man.

Bronson portrays the Mechanic, hit man, Arthur Bishop. In fine style. Bishop is a man unhappily in love with the only woman he knows how to do well. He has a calculating criminal mind with a "100 ways to kill" yet he is sensitive to the fineries of the world: classical music, a lavish home, a sleek Studebaker. He sees in the son of an associate he has been hired to kill, played by Jan-Michael Vincent (Tribes), a little of himself long ago and decides to train him as his partner. Together they form a workable team until greed and power steps in.

"The Mechanic's" cast is very well acted, from the cocky punk in Vincent's performance to the cool, self-assurance of Bronson's. Like Chato's Land, it's a film from the same director again a man of few words. He is gifted with an uncanny ability to carry across a mood to the audience with only the look in his eyes. It is certainly one of his most dously effective in this film.

A film with this many heroes with killers, something our society does quite naturally from the likes of James Bond to Bonnie and Clyde. You find yourself rooting for the bad guy, not too uncommon in this type of film.

But you are left with a great sympathy for the killer with the statement that "murder is only killing without a licence." It is certainly one of his most dously effective in this film.

Ranchers' field seminar

In addition to hearing presentations such as "How to Use Your Veterinarian," "Immunization—Economy through Vaccination," and "Beef Growth with Environmental Concern," cattlemen attending the annual Cattlemen's Field Day will get a chance to taste some "organically grown" beef. The Animal Science Department and the San Luis Obispo County Cattlemen's Association are sponsoring the one-day presentation Wednesday. The seminar will begin at 9 a.m. in the Livestock Pavilion at the Beef Unit.

All interested cattlemen are invited to attend the program which will include demonstrations of intravenous vaccinations, treatment of pink eye, and a discussion of the senior project of Mike Hall and Susan Wayland. Mike Wayland and Hall combined their senior project efforts and raised steers without using additives or hormones. The pair also concluded that they succeeded in this manner was tested in the barbecue which will follow the 7:30 p.m. seminar.

STUDENT CRAFT WORK
A week ago tonight there was a pre-turkey day warmer as the annual varsity-freshman teams got a taste of each other with the more-experienced varsity team coming out on top of the frosh team, 91-65.

With an estimated crowd of about 300 spectators on hand, the game seemed to get off to a very slow start as both teams seemed to have their share of bad passes and turnovers which neither teams could capitalize on.

The first quarter also gave the crowd a look at the new 1973 basketball rules regarding fouls made in the start of the first quarter. The rule now states that the first six team fouls committed against each team goes to the sideline to come back into play instead of the usual free-throw shot for each penalty. On the seventh team foul the player then shoots the free throw.

This new rule didn't seem to have any bad effects for either team as the second quarter got underway. The varsity started capitalizing—on— the—Colts'— mistakes. Bad passes by the frosh team were usually picked up and scored on. But this didn't stop the Colts as they kept coming back each time with the help of excellent play-making and dribbling by freshman guard Paul Ratto, along with the superior shooting of guards Gale Iteage forward Dave Erickson.

At the half the score stood at 38-39 with the varsity controlling the lead but the frosh team was not that far behind. Individual scoring for the frosh was again Erickson with eight and Usage with six. Bob Jennings and Lamar Anderson had the same individual scoring with eight and six. The personal fouls are what hurt the Colts as Leagas already had four personals and Chris Simmons I of three, keeping the frosh guard on and off the bench in the second half.

From the very start of the second half the varsity seemed to come alive defensively as they put on a scoring drive led by the tough backcourt handling and clutch shooting of Jennings, who netted 30 points, taking scoring honors as high man for the match.

The Mustangs then made some key steals and points. This made it hard for the Colts to catch-up as they had two of their top men on and off the bench in foul trouble. James Coleman also had a good night for the more-experienced varsity, scoring eight points for the winning effort. Lamar Anderson, Rick Raed and John Parker also had eight points a piece for the vets along with Junior guard Pinky Williams' six.

For the frosh the big scorer was forward Erickson with 14 points to lead the frosh scoring. Leagas had a good night even though the home-town freshman had foul trouble, scoring 13 points for the losing effort. Forward Simmons and sophomore center Chip Wessberg each had nine points for the frosh.

The varsity team will be starting their regular season on November 28 at Cal State Hayward. The frosh will also begin their season on November 28 at Taft Junior College.
