WAIINOTON (UPI) — His statement was issued at 10:04 P.M. Monday when President Nixon offered to surrender materials presidential tapes that he said would reveal "private doubt" about his secret Watergate tapes. But the White House held another key document: evidence he had agreed to provide to the courts does not exist.

Taking the offensive on the last point, a lengthy statement, Nixon said he "implied" that the White House could not be found. Nixon similarly denied he had "marked" with the dictation of the meeting with John W. Dean III last April 17. The statement said he had been "forced to hide" the "dictation" but that the White House claims that the "marked" tapes were found in a "sealed" locker. "It is my hope that these tapes will be found," Nixon said.

Big Band to play music of jazz era

by Alex Stewart

When was the last time you heard that "Big Band" sound your parents talked about? Or have you ever? If you want the chance than this week's College Hour could be a revelation to you ears. Cal Poly's own 17 piece jazz and stage band, the Collegians, will be performing in the UVU plans Thursday at 11 a.m. The name of the band sure fits with the current nostalgia trend that has been around for over 40 years. E.P. Davidson, who was music department head until this year, mad the band when he founded it in 1963. It was time to show you what was going on if you stick with something long enough it will become popular again. Members of 4-H Clubs from three counties will gather here and have the chance to work on the fitting and the concert this week will have the ability to show off their musical talents. The concert this week will have a repertoire including many different styles and talents including the annual 4-H fair. Participants will gather in the Pavilion where demonstrations on the fitting, and handling of sheep, swine and beef will be demonstrated. The workday is conducted normally by the Cal Poly 4-H group as a service to the Los Osos, Santa Barbara, and Monterey counties.

California Polytechnic State University

Sax solo 'steals show'

by Keith Elinridge

It was the biggish Hurricane Irene in- ocurrs as the Music Department presented the annual Band-O-rama Friday evening before a standing-room-only Chamber Auditorium crowd. The LB playing men and women and the Collegiates stage group pooled their efforts to create a smooth and fluid sound of what band Director Bill Johnson referred to as "the best and largest of any of the audiences for his concert."

The highlight of the show was billed as a film of the marching band's performance at the Oakland Raiders-New York Giants football contest, but Band President Gary Liebman forgot about this and ended the evening with his arrangement of the Dobie Brothers' "Listen to the Music." Johnson and his musicians did a commendable job in controlling the explosive sound of the band knowing it mixed the poor acoustics of Chumash. The marching band is designed to release enough volume to fill a stadium of more than 80,000 spectators. Let's hope the designer of the University Union took this into consideration.

Even though the sound quality of the television is less than desirable, the volume filled every corner allowing for great balance even in the rear seats. The department is to be congratulated for overcoming the problems of presenting a variety of sounds and making the evening run smoothly.

Emcee Larry Fisher can take part of the credit for a smooth transition between numbers. The general manager for WHUS- TV kept the ball rolling with the same skill as "The Real Don Steele" (some general manager is to go back to being a disc jockey every now and then). Complimenting for the powerful sound of the band, the dignity of the "Collegians" put another 4-H event on our 4-H calendar (mentioned on page 4).
Fading from the scene, one seems to be Homecoming, appear to be doings of the college setting, such as the college campus. Some parts of this setting are most commonly on the college campus. The disease is mononucleosis. This disease during the fifty years has been no significant decrease of college students. While some of the traditional myths about it, let's look at some of the things we know, some of the serious disease in its usual form. The name was derived from the average college student offered protection from the virus in the earlier years (a common mononucleosis studies of children of low socioeconomic status, with overcrowding, malnutrition, etc., 20 per cent or more have had the disease, usually unrecognised, and have a permanent immunity on reaching the late teens). The susceptibility of college students, to the contrary, is relatively high. How is it transmitted? This still eludes us but it is pleasing to think of it as the "kissing disease,"[1] have in your way—we can't dispute it. Why is mono a college disease? Probably because the somewhat more affluent background of the average college student offered protection from the virus in the earlier years (it seems immunologic studies of children of persistent myths about it. The name was derived from the finding of abnormal mononucleosis in the blood (such cells are a normal constituent of the blood, but become abnormal). It is not a serious disease in its usual form.

"Ride-alongs" view accidents, brawls

"Ride-alongs" view accidents, brawls

By Sue Zaeen

Marcos arrested, burglaries, traffic accidents, street brawls— you could be a witness to any of these. "Ride Along," a program established by the San Luis Obispo Police Department about three years ago, gives you the chance.

Created in an attempt to bring the police and the public closer together, "Ride Along" has been amazingly successful. Over 400 "ride-along" have participated in the program since January of 1971. "If you wish more people would sign up to ride along with us," said Sergeant Blackhurst, director of the program, "it helps to build good public relations between the police and the people." Appropriately named, "Ride Along" gives anyone over the age of 16 a chance to ride in one of the police patrol cars, with an officer, observing his actions and the activity in town.

"Through this program, we need the public, and the public needs us. It's a two-way street."
Where were you in '62?

The film opens on the last day and night of summer vacation in September with last year’s graduates getting ready to leave for college the next day by enjoying one wild, final night on the town.

Ronny Howard, Opie from Andy Griffith’s old television series, stars as the most popular boy of his class, the one you vote most likely to succeed in whatever life has in store for him. He is the most confident of the film’s four principal characters, confident that leaving the role of his small, rural hometown is the right thing to do.

Richard Dreyfuss, in an impressive acting debut, is on the opposite side of the spectrum. He is the shy, good looking intellectual with a scholarship under his arm and a haunting apprehension in his gut that maybe leaving the good times behind for the “competitive”...
