HAPPY HOLIDAYS

Sad end to race car

The test has had an interesting run history. It competed in the stock cars, and then in 1975 it was retired due to injury. The car was destroyed, but it was rebuilt and continues to drive ever since.

The test's final race was the Stadium at 150 mph in which it finished third in its class. The car earned a lot of good notices for the race, earned and fueled for 22,750 and a tow truck equipment by B.A.R. Inc.

The old test was a friend to everyone, perhaps the new test will earn the cup of a new era of "race-age" drivers.

Christmas festival brings holiday joy

For some of you who feel the true spirit of Christmas has disappeared behind the Man-made masts, there is a chance to see what the holiday was all about.

This weekend, the annual Christmas Festival at the University of California at Los Angeles will be held, and the theme of the festival will be "Christmas in the Ivy".

Music, dancing, and entertainment will provide the backdrop for craftsmen and merchants displaying their wares. Crafts and food booths will be carrying out the early months' market stalls.

To make the event as much of a holiday as possible, quilts and handwoven will be on special sale, and the festival will be a testament to the values and traditions that make Christmas such a special time.
A Christmas collage

The holiday we used to wait breathlessly for when we were kids is almost upon us, and now seems little more than a chance to recuperate after finals, relax as much as possible and prepare for another grueling quarter.

have given much this quarter. First, a word about the Graphic Arts Department— the hidden entity that is in charge of the publishing end of Mustang Daily. Graphics is a tedious and often unrewarding job—yet one which any newspaperman can do without. The people in graphics are just as much a part of the Mustang Daily as are the reporters and editors, and often get up with journalistic errors. I remember how my parents used to let me put cookies out on the fireplace hearth for Santa every Christmas Eve. And Santa must've really come down the chimney, because there was soot on the napkin and on the milk glass.

There are a lot of adults in the world right now who would like to believe in Santa Claus. A Child of love—and laughs—and giving.

Without. The people in graphics are just as much a part of the Mustang Daily as are the reporters and editors, and often get up with journalistic errors. I remember how my parents used to let me put cookies out on the fireplace hearth for Santa every Christmas Eve. And Santa must've really come down the chimney, because there was soot on the napkin and on the milk glass.

It was such fun believing in Santa, although I wonder if any kid, deep inside really does believe.

The ancient Christmas story is just as miraculous and the joy of living goes on. For another grueling quarter.

But they can't when they see nothing but hate and starvation, oppression and war.

Maybe we should all play Santa, and put just a little of that Christmas partying money aside for people who have a right to love and laugh as much as Santa, as much as us.

Merry Christmas?

In order to keep up with the holiday spirit, I've compiled a list of gifts I plan to give some of my friends for Christmas. Just so you don’t buy them the same presents, here’s a portion of my list:

- A new football helmet for President Ford.
- A Swiss watch for the guy who is responsible for setting the clocks in all of the buildings on campus.
- A bottle of any kind of liquor for Dr. Kennedy.
- A decant physical education facility for the students.
- A clock for the Student Affairs Council.
- Two hamburgers and a Coke for Jerry Brown.
- A coat of paint for the outside of the University Union.
- A strip joint for Wilbur Mills.
- Refrigerators for the dorms.
- A parking lot for students within walking distance of classes.
- Unconditional imprisonment for Lt. William Calley.
- An honorary degree for Ronald Reagan from UC Berkeley.
- A real hard rock concert for Cal Poly.
- A benefit concert for the Red Wind Foundation somewhere in the county.
- Academic freedom for the students.
- Rapid transit for Los Angeles.
- A clock for the Student Affairs Council.
- New typewriters for the typing room in Mustang Dally.

Counseling center)... Nancy Jorgensen, also gave her views on why SAC should approve the bylaws. She claimed minority groups deal with the problem of discrimination by gathering together and sharing ideas.

Richard Carsel, attorney for the ASI (who later submitted a cancellation of the retain agreement between himself and the ASI), said he was of the opinion SAC had no reasonable legal grounds to deny recognition to the GSU.

According to the attorney, should the administration reject the approval by SAC, it would be doing so without any legal grounds. Carsel told the members of the council the state Attorney General had said the state would not deny recognition if certain restrictive membership clauses were deleted.

Carsel made reference to the first time the original bylaws were approved by SAC and subsequently were vetoed by the administration. When the ASI decided to bring Kennedy to court, the university president was upheld in his rejection because of the membership clause which has since been rewritten.

Varied Christmas views reflect life philosophies

"Both humbug. Need I go farther? Have a great Christmas. It's very difficult to be honest. I'll be my answer to both humbug."

Sociologist Dr. Smith gives his Christmas message to the American people. If you were able to give a Christmas message to the American people, what would it be? I asked the question of sociologist Smith, an economist, businessman, scientist, clergyman, and a philosopher.

"From a sociological point of view it would have to be named peaches," said Smith. Feminism is easy to come by these days, and people are more than willing to offer their warnings of impending doom.

"This Christmas, for many people, there's not much to be very optimistic about," says Cal Poly sociologist John Adams. Describing the current economic situation as a very rapidly developing depression, Adams says that things are going to get worse before they get better.

"If you were able to give a Christmas message to the American people," Adams continued. Dave Garth, director of the San Luis Obispo Chamber of Commerce, had some practical suggestions for the American people.

"I want to encourage people to restrain their spending slightly, to increase their savings, and to resist price increases. They should avoid products that have shown the highest inflationary increases, resist price increases. They should avoid products spending slightly, to increase their savings, and to suggestions for the American people.

Alphorn player does it sweetly

by RICHARD McMAHON

What instrument is seen first long and resembles a yellow banana pipe? Its song has been used in several traditional dances and ceremonies. It is traditionally played with closed eyes.

"Alphorn player does it sweetly"

He knows this for a fact; he is a member of an alphorn trio that days with the Los Angeles-based Swiss singing wooden harmonica. Hansen's group, he boasted, is "probably the biggest group west of the Mississippi."

A native of Colorado who grew up in Mariposa, Hansen started playing the instrument in third grade. He learned from Colonial College, Los Angeles on a dream and speech, "I don't know...I'm just going to do," he said the frustrated 18-year-old student, who recently received his musical education in speech and drama from Cal State at Long Beach. He is easily carried from a hospital to a hotel, a hotel to a home, a home to a hotel, always blown into the pocket, each song is sung by a different player, and the final note of the tune to be played is always blown separately as a kind of warm-up, or prelude. Hansen's group, he boasted, is "probably the biggest group west of the Mississippi."

Soils competition

Dirt: a deep subject

by BOB McENTEE

Soil is described by Webster's as that portion of the earth or ground in which plants grow. This by itself would seem like a regional track race or other sports event until further investigation into what goes on leading up to the competition.

According to George Boreo, team captain, different areas are focused on during the competition. First a pit is dug, exposing various layers of soil for the team members to observe. Then the team must describe the soil by touch, color and texture, and rate the differences in the layers or horizons. They must then make inferences on descriptions made as the properties each horizon has.

A classification follows, according to the Soil Taxonomy, which is a world-wide classification system. After all this, they rate the soil for suitability and limitations, or what the soil can be used for. Boreo said that with the importance of Environmental Impact Studies the need for soil experts is increasing.

Livestock judge sure makes hay

by LYNETTE BAYLESS

When it comes to livestock judging, Dave Biggers really knows his stuff. The 20-year-old agricultural business management major just completed a very successful year on the livestock judging team. It was a year that found Biggers competing in collegiate judging contests from the Great Western Livestock Exposition in Los Angeles to the International Livestock Show in Chicago. It was a year in which Biggers found himself being named high scoring individual in three major judging contests.

Biggers began the season last January by winning high overall individual at the Denver National Livestock Exposition. He said, "That was the biggest thrill of the year because the Denver show is one of the two largest livestock expositions that holds a collegiate judging contest." Biggers garnered other awards for being the high scoring individual at the Grand National Livestock Show at the Cow Palace in San Francisco and at the Silver Dollar Judging contest in Chico. Biggers said, "I’ve won mostly trophies and ribbons, but at the Cow Palace I won a 150 belt buckle.” Twenty-five teams from nine states competed at the Cow Palace. Biggers grew up on a cattle ranch near Merced. In addition to cattle, the family raises horses and grows grain and alfalfa.

Biggers says the ranch is mainly a cow-calf commercial operation. Biggers had very little experience judging livestock before he came to Cal Poly. "I took the first judging class, Livestock Evaluation 226, and then took the Advanced Livestock Evaluation class," he said.

The advanced judging class is for students who are seriously interested in judging. The class includes three hour workouts on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons plus judging practice on Saturday that lasts the whole day. For those students who continue judging, these practices (continued on page 11)

In forming alphorn players in the world, though the number of alphorns resting over a fireplace or gathering dust in storage is much greater. Because the demand for alphorns is small, Henigen believes that all are handcrafted. The curve in an alphorn's bell is natural, for each one is made of a tree specially selected from a particular county, whose leaves, after being dried and placed, set it in bell and eventually become part of it. The good sound quality and rugged durability with just three or four keys in the horn are right.

The simplest part of playing an alphorn is hitting the right note. "If your lips aren't exactly right, you're going to hit the wrong note," Henigen said. This problem is caused by the absence of keys or valves, which serve a corrective function on the other instruments. Because of this, Henigen can play only one version of each note. If a note is not exactly right, Henigen is able to display it to the right note. ... after it is written in the music..."

Natur: music explained that most alphorn music is handed down by oral interpretation. Besides, playing from memory is another alphorn tradition.

Henigen met the members of his trio, Robert Purrer and Paul Meijer, at Mustang Lounge in downtown Santa Maria. The trio has performed at various locations throughout California. They have played at the Napa Hotel, the Alpaca Restaurant in Los Angeles, and at the Swiss Alps Hotel in Nevada. They have also performed at the Swiss Alps Hotel in Nevada. Science and Man

Next quarter, students in Humanities 70 Science and Man will examine the conflict and complementarity of humanists and scientists. Students will investigate the personal and individual relations which scientists have to their discipline and to the human search for meaning in the universe.

The three credit course is designed for science majors who wish to see their discipline from the outside and for non-science majors who wish to understand scientists.

The reading list touches a wide spread of contemporary issues, and includes The Double Helix, Science and Human Values.

Big game hunting: test of strength, determination

by MOLLIE STEWART

Hitting the "grand slam" is never easy. It's one of those great feats that is not accomplished easily, either in baseball or in hunting. But, chances are they are much better in baseball.

The "grand slam" of hunting is a collection of four rare species of big game sheep. A hunter is allowed only one of the Dall, Rocky Mountain Bighorn, Desert Bighorn, or the Mountain Ovis a year. These four sheep constitute the "grand slam."

Chris Dryden, a Farm Management major at Cal Poly, is working on his own slam slowly, but surely. One reason is because of a waiting list of about a year and a half of hunters who also want their own "trophies." Another reason is his name must be drawn from among hundreds of others because of a limit to the number of hunters allowed into British Columbia each year. These four sheep constitute the "grand slam."

In 1972, Dryden and a friend went to the Cassiar Mountains and the Northers Rockies. They set out with two guides and seven horses into the "bush" which is totally isolated. For three days they lived on only meat and rice.

The lake had frozen over and the pontoon plane could not land. The trip was not a complete success. They had attempted to shoot moose, mountain caribou, stone sheep, and a grizzly bear. Everything was caught, except the grizzly bear.

In 1973 Dryden went to the Pink Mountains at the foot of the Canadian Rockies. Dryden paid $12,000 for a "blank trip." For 10 days he and his guide had tracked grizzly bear. Dryden shot the bear six times. It managed to escape.

"After I shot it, we tried to track it, but it got too dark and we couldn't chase it. It probably died but we never found it. It was about eight feet tall," said Dryden.

Dryden's biggest prize was a 1,200 pound moose he shot. The moose was shot with a 30 Winchestor Magnum and dropped dead in about two feet of water.

He and the guides dragged it out of the water, but "capping" it. (skimming it out). All game a hunter expects to ship or take back must immediately be gutted out.

Poly to host Aggie hoop tournament

If the Cal Poly basketball team can bring itself back in time, the Mustangs would appear to be in good position to win its own tournament this weekend for the fourth time in the five-year history of the event.

Coach Ernie Wheeler's Cal Poly team was routing Taft Saturday night in front of 4,786 University of Pacific. The Tigers figure to challenge for the Pacific Coast Athletic Association championship and had beaten Poly badly the previous two years.

Friday's opening round games at 7 p.m., plus Westmont (1-1) vs. Sacramento State (0-1), Cal Poly (3-1) faces Stanislaus State (1-1) in the 9 p.m. encounter.

Losers will meet for the consolation title at 7 p.m. Saturday with the championship game slated for 9 p.m. in the gymnasium in the Physical Education Building here.

A year ago the Mustangs finished third in the tournament after winning the first three championships. Poly was bumped 71-68 by Abacus Pacific in the first round and then came back to jar Sonoma State 78-48.

Both the Mustangs and Sonoma qualified for the NCAA Division II West Regionals, with Poly’s championship game upset of the Dons earning the team a berth in the NCAA West Regional.

Senior guard Gary Orgill has set a hot early pace in his bid to take up the scoring slack left by the departure of last season’s top two pointsmen. Orgill is shooting 58.9 per cent from the field and averaging 18.3 points per game.

“Orgill has demonstrated excellent leadership ability thus far. He is doing a good job of penetrating the defense, hitting the open shot and passing to the open man. And his shot selection has been good,” Wheeler said.

Rugby team will compete in tourney

The Cal Poly rugby team members will play in a tournament this weekend at UC Santa Barbara. The team is designed to develop a Southern California all-star team that will compete against other leagues.

Poly rugger Kevin Archer said that schools from throughout Southern California will participate.

Players will not play with their teams, however. Instead, the players will split up and form other teams because, Archer added, this will make it easier to decide the top players.

Cal Poly’s regular rugby season will start on Jan. 1.

And in that television time zone there were six-pack guzzlers, nearly passed out on the living room sofa, watching over their sacred game of the week by weekend days and Monday nights too.

And Howard Cosell interrupted the game and the glory of Roone Arledge shone around him. And the suds-swallowing sports gasers were filled with fear. (They thought the game was going to be replaced by another showing of the Ali-Llston fight with Bobby Riggs doing the color.) But Howie said unto them: "Be not afraid; for there will be no room for them on the great days. Wives of viewers.
