Sound Advice?

Amusure playing Perry Mason may be entertaining students who seriously need competent legal help.

This fear on the part of at least three San Luis Obispo attorneys was pointed out in a Mustang Daily story. The source of the problem is the Legal Aid Committee, which is funded by the Associated Students, Inc.

Nine student volunteers work for legal aid in conjunction with a legal research clerk offered by the Business Administration Dept. ASI attorney Michael Devitt, a SLO attorney who is employed part-time by the ASI, insists that the students offer direction and assistance that Devitt cannot.

Legal Aid volunteer Linda Abramofski said volunteers, if they are certain, tell students where they should go to find the help they need. If not, the student fills out a disclaimer which is evaluated by Devitt and returned to the student.

The Legal Aid program is one of the most useful ones the ASI offers for all students, but it could be doing more harm than good. Abramofski admitted that Devitt in many cases is not getting all the information he needs from the disclaimer. Students don't know how to present their problems adequately on paper.

SLO attorney Orient Donley pointed out the possibility of a misunderstanding is threat to the student client. Another local attorney, James downtown, said student volunteers are not skilled enough to recognize serious problems.

Attorney Ray Gallo believes any second-hand information is dangerous.

Since the ASI wants to provide legal aid, it should do so without hindering Devitt with inadequate information. We believe the ASI should commit itself to retaining Devitt on campus for at least one day a week. This is necessary for him to meet the students face to face and determine what their problems exactly are.

Devitt justifiably describes himself as a man who can get to the heart of the matter, and the ASI would be getting its money's worth for his time. Devitt believes it would be more convenient for himself and the student clients for him to be on campus.

This proposal is under consideration, and it should be tried out for at least a trial period. The ASI is providing a service most students would otherwise have to go without, but it is doing so with one hand tied behind its back.

The ASI should go all the way or it might as well not go at all.

Zion Debate

Editor:
In response to inquiries about the Zionism activity, the Political Action Club cancelled in January, it was not because of any human quality such as "fear". It was cancelled due to lack of representation on both sides.

The political Action Club will not stage an activity so controversial as Zionism without equal representation on hand.

We were unable to contact everyone in the Arab Club and the club's activities are not seen by any of his students for several weeks.

If equal representation can not be established, the activity will not be rescheduled.

The Political Action Club would also like to point out at this time that the original activity was NOT a debate but a discussion, as advertised. If at any time the Zionism activity is rescheduled it would again be a discussion. We will not try to resolve this issue. If the people involved in reality cannot resolve the problem, the Political Action Club certainly will not even attempt such an idea in a two-hour meeting.

If the participants are willing to discuss this issue as rational adults, which according to Letters To The Editor is what can be done, further consideration will be taken into the rescheduling of the activity.

The Political Action Club truly believes this activity can be handled in a calm manner with everyone benefiting from the information passed on during the discussion.

The Political Action Club is not advocating a stand on this issue and would not hesitate to cancel the activity again if conditions arise which contradict the purpose of the discussion.

If interested students would care to help organize this activity and if a definite motion is passed to reorganize the discussion, feel free to contribute your assistance by leaving your name and telephone number in Box 48 of the Activities Planning Center in the University Union.

In re. Letters to the editor, Feb. 10, letter on Zionism by Yourself Maxi.

Pardon me, but I seem to have stepped through the referendum in which the fifteen or twenty million Jews on this planet decided that you, an Arab, are qualified to decide what Judaism and Zionism are and what their respective policies and ideals may be.

Department Merger Delayed

by BETSY SUSMAN
Daily Staff Writer

The women may not have won the latest round in the administrative battle called "Merging the Men’s and Women’s Physical Education Departments," but they have been granted a time-out.

Earlier this month, Pres. Robert I. Kennedy agreed to postpone the merging of the two departments until September 1977.

Men's and Women's PE had been combined in one department until the fall of 1970. The separation came with an overall campus administrative reorganization.

In June 1975, Kennedy directed the two departments to merge again into one department on or before September 1976. According to sources in the men's department, the decision was designed to end the squabbling between the two.

An important source of conflict concerned which department would implement the new Recreation Administration (RA) major.

The go-ahead on the major has been postponed until the departments merge.

Dr. Mary Stallard of the women's department estimates there are about 40 students of both sexes pursuing the curriculum of the RA major in anticipation of its official implementation.

"We should advise, Where is the Recreation Administration major yet?" said Dr. Mary Lou White, head of the men's PE department. Stallard said the men had handed out curriculum sheets before the major was unconditionally implemented. White felt many students had been "ill-advised."

"I feel badly as far as the students are concerned," said Dr. Robert Moss, head of the men's PE department. He said the men had handed out preliminary curriculum sheets because they expected the major to be established shortly. He pointed out that the 1975-76 university catalog specifically states in the RA major curriculum description, "not offered 1975-76."

Those students caught in this administrative clip can continue in the regular PE major or transfer to another university with an established RA major said White. The women's PE department has in the past worked out deviations for those PE majors interested in a recreation concentration, and will continue to do so.

Aside from the temporarily delayed RA major, the women are pleased with the postponement. Explained White: Although the women are not in favor of the original split in 1970, they have since discovered they have more influence and control over their activities with their own department.

Because they fear serious inequities in funding and personnel, the women have been requesting the postponement of the merger. In a letter to Kennedy dated June 28, 1976, the departments said: "During this time...the feasibility and equity of a combined department could be explored in depth to ascertain advantages and disadvantages and necessary changes in staffing to ensure the unbiased impartiality and harmony of such a merger."

Said Stallard, "I have difficulty seeing many advantages, unless some serious changes are made."

"We want to see it work under two departments first," said White. "If we think it will work, fine."

As to how to achieve equity, White said, "We’re not advocating cutting one program to benefit another."

In staffing, the single department would have 56 men, faculty members and eight women. Because Cal Poly is in a steady state (the number of faculty members is fixed), there could be no new positions opened simply to create equity in staffing.

White did not recommend firing men to hire women. She urged a re-evaluation of the present positions. There is now an opening in the men's department. Re-evaluation could provide a possible position for a woman.

"We are realistic. We don’t expect instant equity," said White. The women would settle for a gradual balancing in the men-women faculty ratio as positions open up.

According to White, they would expect equity at least within the next 15 years.

The men interviewed were opposed to the postponement. They felt the problems could be solved under one department. More information continued on page 10.

How now brown cow?

If Cal Poly dairy products are any indication to how the cow is, she’s doing real good.

Tucked away between the parking lots and the agriculture engineering lies the dairy product world. The Food Processing Building houses the shiny silver equipment that milks out the dairy food. Five to six thousand gallons of milk a week are transformed into various dairy products.

Dr. Carl Moy, instructor in the dairy processing, is a brisk busy man whose phone rings incessively and people crowd to speak with him. “We process milk, chocolate milk, buttermilk, half and half, butter, whipped and sour cream, ice cream, cottage cheese and eggnog,” he said.

On the average, the prices in the student store are the same as downtown. Some products are less because the government doesn’t qualify it as a regular store.

“It’s difficult to keep up with the prices downtown, they fluctuate so,” remarked Moy. “A few weeks ago we put out butter on Thursday and Friday it was all gone. We didn’t know why it went so fast and people were asking for more. Then we found out that downtown butter was going for a dollar and a quarter and ours was only a dollar. We really have to watch prices.”

Evaluation Before Graduation

If you're looking for a job, you may not have to look much further than Cal Poly. On the second floor of the Administration Building lies the Placement office. According to its director, Prof. Rittenhouse Poly students are doing well on the job market.

"Employers love this school. It has a tremendous reputation," says Rittenhouse. "The students are well prepared for work because the school is occupation-oriented."

Recruiters from a large variety of companies come to Poly every year to interview seniors for possible post-graduate employment. Over 1000 interview spots were offered last year because students didn't apply for them, claims Rittenhouse. Rittenhouse blames student infeasibility for the huge 800 hours of interview time left blank. He feels many students aren't flexible enough about the exact type of work, the location of the job, or the starting salary.

"A student should think of his degree as adaptable, leading to a broader horizon of jobs," commented Rittenhouse. As times become economically harder, the number of employers on campus decrease. A percent decrease occurred at Poly last year which was much better than most of the other campuses, according to Rittenhouse.

Referring to Poly's success rate in interviews, Rittenhouse said, "Look where this school is located. Recruiters wouldn't come to this little town if they weren't hiring.

He predicts salaries will be a little better this year than last. January, February and March are the heaviest recruiting times, but it is wise for seniors to begin applying in October, says the placement director.
If a human being is to progress in any normal sort of fashion at this university, he cannot confine his learn-by-doing to tractor driving, air conditioner repairing, bologna slicing or any of the other arts offered at Cal Poly which have made it a hand trowel in the garden of higher education.

There's simply more to it.

There's that thing some call love, some intense like, some call mush and all call exciting.

That's what Valentine's Day was first intended to honor: A day to really get it up (as they say in crude circles) for the person of your dreams, the Pt's Burger in the Snack Bar of your life. The 'A' on your romantic report card.

That was the intention. And it is a good and fine one. But it's not quite right.

You can't find mush, mush, love "like", or whatever, on a 15 cents red and white heart shaped Hallmark card. You won't find it at a 20-per-cent-off-on-all-sweat-on-Valentine's-Day-Sellabration either.

Where you'll find that extra something which makes the little heart go pitter patter is on the lawn when the sun comes back after a substantial stretch of rain.

It's the birds and the bees, man — with a little extra tossed in for punch.

Besides the functional purpose of pollinating flowers, it is what springish weather is all about.

It's best if you can experience it nose to nose with eyes closed.

But if you have to share with someone else — or hide behind the facade of "let's go study on the grass, I've been having problems with chapter 15" — so be it. As the saying sort of goes: Better to have loved on the grass, than not to have loved at all and go to class.

Teacher’s Wives Care For Students

A Club For Skydivers

Ever hid the urge to loir through the sky like a bird — with a parachute attached to your back?

For those who currently engage in the import of skydiving, or are interested in learning about it, the Statetaria Sky Diving Club will hold its first organizational meeting today at 11 a.m. in Rm. SIS of the University Union. The future of the new club and technicalities such as creation of bylaws for the group will be the main topics of discussion.

The group is also looking for an advisor, and any interested faculty members are invited to attend.

They also have a selection of light reading material. "Perhaps our biggest service is the absentee forms. We have the students fill out a form for their instructor which we sign and date. It officially notifies the instructor of the student’s illness making it easier to make up missed work or a missed test," Mrs. DeKleine says.

The women involved have been well received by both students and the staff at the Health Center. Sylvia Vohrle is in her second year of working with the Hospital Auxiliary section of the Cal Poly Women's Club. "Occasionally you meet a student who is in one of your husband's classes. It is interesting for the students to see their teacher's better half," she said.

This service for the students started in 1967. It has been continued and expanded since that time. The most recent addition was a large cart that allows for the supplies to be displayed, making it easier for a patient in bed to see.

Along with helping the patients, the Hospital Auxiliary is interested in helping the Health Center in whatever way they can.

Last quarter, on the suggestion of the Hospital Auxiliary, the Cal Poly Women’s Club purchased two portable television sets for use by the hospitalised students.

The distance between Cal Poly and home seems to expand when you are ill. The Cal Poly Women's Club tries to shorten that distance by offering some of the services of home through the Hospital Auxiliary.

The 16 women who make up the Hospital Auxiliary, mostly faculty wives, take turns visiting students in the Health Center’s infirmary.

Gloria Dickenson heads up the team which daily check in on the students to see if their personal needs are being met.

"I think students usually stay in the Health Center longer than they had originally planned for. Many times they need a reason to contact their roommate or take care of special situations," Mrs. DeKleine says.

On their daily rounds the women offer students some of the smaller items they may have forgotten, such as paper, pens, envelopes, prescription, combs, toothbrushes, toothpaste.

Picking The Right Greens
by JULI DROWN
Daily Staff Writer

Mother might have had to use all kinds of inducements to make you eat your vegetables as a little kid but she shouldn't have to any more.

Even if it's true, as mother probably used to say, that vegetables are good for you, they should also taste good. That is if you know how to choose them right at the market, store them properly at home and cook them to just the right perfection.

Charles Atlee, Cal Poly vegetable science instructor gives some suggestions and information for the vegetable consumer.

Vegetable quality is not the same from store to store. "I think you'll find differences," Atlee said. "Some markets try harder to adhere to quality standards than others. They will sell uniform vegetables, have them well packaged and often carry brand name produce."

Locally grown vegetables might be fresher than normal market produce bought as uniform in looks. "Local produce may even be of better food quality yet cheaper in cost. The stores haven't had to pay for shipping containers or parking house expenses," Atlee added.

When markets choose the produce they'll sell in their stores, they all check for vegetable free of insects, rot and other disease, he said. Many customers handle them in the market, Atlee added it was a good idea to wash them, although the quality is still good. "But this won't appeal to the housewife when she sees them in the market."

Freezing temperatures have also been the cause of pithy celery. The cold rupture the plant cells and cause them to dry out.

Besides frost damage, there are other things to look for when selecting produce.

When a root vegetable is sending out small roots it's an indication that it's been around a long time," Atlee said. "One of the rules is that California-raised vegetables are better than those raised in the state from Mexico or are produced at higher cost in greenhouses."

After bringing purchased vegetables home from the market, Atlee said it was a good idea to wash them. "If you hate to wash vegetables, wash them before you store them in your refrigerator," he said. "The additional moisture will help keep them crispier," he said. (Daily Photo by Mark MacKinnon)

Most vegetables can be kept in the refrigerator until they're ready to be eaten. As long as potatoes can be stored in a cool dry place, they need not be kept in refrigeration. If they are, Atlee recommends that they be taken out of the refrigerator a minimum of time. Otherwise, they will become soft.

Now that you know how to choose vegetables and store them, it's time to eat them. With a little cooking help from mother or a recipe book, you should come up with some tasty vegetable dishes. How about those asparagus as long as they are perishable and the pealings are thrown away.

Even though a California consumer may choose his vegetables available in his town, he is still getting the best produce raised in the state. The highest quality produce is shipped early to metropolitan areas.

"Only the best vegetables can stand the long shipping yet arrive in acceptable condition to garner the high prices which are necessary to pay for the entire transportation," Atlee said.

It's a bad deal for state consumers especially considering that California raises almost half the vegetables consumed in the United States.

Currently, the vegetables which are most available in San Luis Obispo are the cool season produce (those ripened by the snow, beets or roots as being common versus warm season vegetables which have their best seasons). These include broccoli, cauliflower, leeks, carrots, beets, cabbage, squash (easily stored from the fall), sweet potatoes, artichokes and turnips.

Warm weather vegetables that are presently being sold such as tomatoes and green peppers, are more expensive in California than cool season produce. This is because the weather is warmer and the vegetables are produced at higher cost in greenhouses. After bringing purchased vegetables home from the market, Atlee said it was a good idea to wash them. "If you hate to wash vegetables, wash them before you store them in your refrigerator," he said. "The additional moisture will help keep them crispier," he said.

There are some vegetables that shouldn't be washed until they're used in order to prohibit skin deterioration. Beans, cucumbers, summer squash, cucumbers and tomatoes.

Films, Lectures Part Of Two-Week Festival

Since the Bicentennial is a time for looking back and celebrating, the History and Political Science Departments of Cal Poly have joined forces to sponsor a bicentennial festival. Highlighting the event will be "Five Critical Issues," a touring exhibit prepared by the Smithsonian Institution covering the elections of Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, Abraham Lincoln, William McKinley and Franklin Roosevelt.

During the two-week period films, lectures and panel discussions have been scheduled, using the knowledge and interests of Cal Poly faculty members and guest lecturers.

"Modern Times," a silent film starring Charlie Chaplin will be presented Feb 17 at 7:30 in Chumash Auditorium. "A Nation Of Immigrants" and "The Inheritance" are scheduled for March 1 and March 11 at 12 noon in the Home Economics Living Room.

"Political Issues of 1976" will be explored in a roundtable discussion between Dr. Richard Krejza, of the county board of supervisors; John Sneedinger, history instructor; Walter Blue, economics instructor and James Roderick, Don Buller, and John Culver, political science instructors. The panel will meet Feb 8 at 11 am in the University Union Room 880.

Dr. Max Lerner, a syndicated columnist will be lecturing on "Is America A Dying Civilization? Where We Go From Here," on March 4 at 11 am in Chumash Auditorium.

A second guest lecturer will be Professor Kenneth Brann, of the University of California at Berkeley's history department, speaking on "Slavery, Racism and the Political Revolution of the 1860's."

The Road To Salvation
Mapping Different Routes

Mapping Different Routes

When to do you follow? Cal Poly Christian organizations offer 16 different roads to salvation.

Each road has an individual map and course chart guiding the "flock.."

Even though each Christian group gives its own parable of faith, each is largely coordinated under one head pastor, Bruce Tjaden.

Tjaden is pastor of the Campus Christian Center.

"My flock" is the whole educational community of greater San Luis Obispo," said Tjaden.

There is disagreement between the 16 organizations about whose "flock" is following the right path.

A question frequently asked is -- Who are the "true" Christians? Tjaden replied to the sensitive question:

"To 9,000 people who have followed Jesus Christ in a diversity of ways. Cal Poly 16 individual Christian groups demonstrate how this can be successfully done."

All Christian organizations on campus are directed by the Associated Students. Most of the groups have some form of Bible study sessions held on or off campus. Each group is required to have a "true" Christian frame work -- but that's as far as the similarities go.

In a random survey by the Daily of the Campus Christian organizations -- 11 groups agreed, on one point -- there is no clear cut definition of the "Christian."

These groups interviewed agreed that each organization represents a different stand on the Bible.

"Alpha Omega Fellowship is one group," said Mike Cordell, president of Intervarsity Fellowship, Campus Crusade for Christ and the Navigators, work together to sponsor activities and to hold fellowship with one another.

The coalition: Intervarsity Fellowship, Campus Crusade for Christ and the Navigators, work together to sponsor activities and to hold fellowship with one another.

The coalition: Intervarsity Fellowship, Campus Crusade for Christ and the Navigators, work together to sponsor activities and to hold fellowship with one another.

Mike Cordell, president of Intervarsity Fellowship suma up the question of defining "true" Christians in one sentence.

"The word Christian is just about as distorted as the word love," said Cordell.

He went further and said, each person must find his own definition whether it's through a group or by himself. Every Christian has Jesus Christ in common, said Cordell. That alone should make a common bond between all of us.

Don Schibe, president of Campus Crusade agrees with Cordell.

Godly love is unconditional. If you accepted God, he will accept you. We are all Christians if we have accepted Jesus Christ," he said.

President of the Navigator, Jeff McDaidney said, "The Christian Organisation is just a tool. Personally, my loyalty is to Christ -- not to the organisation."

It will be for members, and has grown to over 40 members. On March 8 they will be featuring a car show at Home Motors in Santa Maria at 11 a.m.

Tom Hayden

Student and faculty interested in helping the Tom Hayden for Senate campaign can meet today at 3 p.m. in UU 819. Business and Social Sciences will be held Wednesday, April 15 on an appeal of the U.S. District Court bans Red Food No. 2. The California Classic Chevy was denied by a U.S. District Court Judge last Friday. The appeals court issued a temporary stay Monday, but ended it in Wednesday's ruling and has not proven the dye to be unsafe and has placed the burden upon its manufacturers to prove its safety.

The FDA, acting against the dye, used heavily in hundreds of food items as well as cosmetics, candy, ice cream, maraschino cherries and pill coatings, because of unresolved safety questions, including the possibility it can cause cancer. The FDA will begin enforcing the ban Thursday, a spokesman for the agency said.

Manufacturers and one company that used the dye in grape soda pop asked for a stay of the ban, pending a full hearing of their appeal, which was rejected by a U.S. District Court Judge last Friday.

The appeals court issued a temporary stay Monday, but ended it in Wednesday's ruling and has not proven the dye to be unsafe and has placed the burden upon its manufacturers to prove its safety.

SAC Post

Elections for a SAC representative from the School of Business and Social Sciences will be held Wednesday, April 15 on an appeal of the U.S. District Court bans Red Food No. 2. The California Classic Chevy was denied by a U.S. District Court Judge last Friday. The appeals court issued a temporary stay Monday, but ended it in Wednesday's ruling and has not proven the dye to be unsafe and has placed the burden upon its manufacturers to prove its safety.

The District Court said the FDA did not have to establish the dye was hazardous to humans but merely find that questions about its safety existed. Consumer groups have been seeking to get the dye outlawed for the past four years.

The FDA Commissioner Alexander Schmidt issued a statement laying the two department's bad for the students, said Harden. "Under a single department we would provide a more organized physical education program for the students."

"The animosity between the two departments is bad for the students," said Harden. "Under a single department we would work together." Although Moti did not like the idea of a possible re organization, he felt it was an administrative decision to abide with and make the best of.
Poly Rugby Team Nips Australians

For the first eight hours of their visit Tuesday the Australian rugby players were given the "red carpet treatment" by the Cal Poly Rugby team members. But when the game got under way, the Mustangs were anything but friendly hosts.

Poly handed the Australians a 6-0 defeat in the first ever rugby night game at Cal Poly. It took until the last two minutes of the match for the Mustangs to score, but that was all they needed.

Wayne Stickells intercepted a pass on his own five yard line and galloped 88 yards for the only score of the game with time running out. Andy Williams connected on the conversion to make the final tally, 6-0.

Most of the Australian players said they were impressed with Cal Poly and the area, especially the caliber of rugby.

Cal Poly is now 3-5 on the year with a game this Saturday against Kern County. Starting time is 1 p.m. with the game to be played on the lower soccer field.

Spikers To Host UC Irvine

While many Cal Poly teams will be busy this time weekend skiing at Tahoe, and erling at Newport, this Poly volleyball team will be rather busy themselves. Coach Ken Pratton's squad will host UC Irvine Saturday night at 7:30 p.m. for conference clash and then it will head south for ten day for the UCSB Invitational.

Pratton expects Irvine to be a vastly improved team from its last year's conference tourney. They are 1-0 looking at their competitive score. It isn't going to be that easy figuring out conference need to 3-0. Poly is narrowly 8-0 and one point behind league leader UCLA. UCLA, and San Diego State are the top rated teams in the conference.

Cagers Have It Rough In Pullman

Last year the Cal Poly wrestling team stepped up to major college status. It has been a successful move for Vaughan Hitchcock’s crew. Hopefully, however, Ernie Wheeler doesn’t entertain such notions for his basketball team.

Washington State had just too much talent and class for Cal Poly Tuesday night, and easily posted an 87-61 win over the Mustangs in Pullman, Wash.

“It’s another world,” Poly coach Ernie Wheeler said of playing against a Pacific 8 school. “When you’re playing against a Pac 8 team at home like we did tonight, I think our kids find out what it’s all about.”

The Mustangs were never in the game, thanks to a season high 27 turnovers and a poor 39 per cent field goal shooting mark. State blew the game open with a 47-27 halftime lead, but Cal Poly held its own in the second period against the Cougar substitutes.

The Mustangs also got some first-hand experience against some of the game’s biggest players. State took turns rotating 6’11-and-one-half” Steve Puidokas, 7’1” James Donaldson and 6’11” John Teason in against Poly, which has no player over 6’8”.

Despite the superior height advantage, State’s big men did minimal damage by comparison to 6’9” forward Ron Davis. It was the sharp-shooting senior’s game high 15 points that continually dropped the Mustangs further behind.

Andre Kehs was the brightest spot on offense for the locals, as he scored 20 points. Gerald Jones was the only other Mustang in double figures, with 11.

“Perhaps in my own thinking,” Wheeler continued, “When we go back into league, we’re going to play those two guys together. It gives us a lot better quickness, and defensively we’re a little better.”

“We’re completely out of any type of contention at all for the title,” he said. “So I think our whole role has to be as a spoiler. I know we’re capable of playing much better than we have.”
