Little known buildings relive past
Cyrus: An adVance

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance's admissions that the new administration intends to speak out on international human rights issues in welcome fashion.

His position stands in direct contrast to the former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's preference for "quiet diplomacy." Until his departure, Kissinger's public statements were counterproductive and produced limited results.

But Kissinger's method accords little credibility. Certainly there were the Helsinki agreements, but the principles were agreed to only on paper. Little has been put into practice.

Vance is trying a different approach to the whole problem of international human rights. Too long the United States has remained silent on this vital issue. We are a nation founded on the ideals of freedom and liberty, but we have failed to live up to those ideals in other nations. This is particularly true in Communist and Third World countries where the regard for human rights is nil.

Now changes are taking place. The U.S. is starting to assume a proper place in the world's affairs. While we no longer can consider ourselves as the policeman of the world, we still can assume a leadership role in other vital areas.

The case of Soviet dissident Andrei D. Sakharov is a case in point. The Carter administration has come out in support of Sakharov and his fight to maintain the liberal totalitarian Soviet system.

While such statements of support may be a welcome development to those who are well informed, much more must be done. This is not to say that we must think in terms of the moral absolutes that such remarks will not help. Such moderation is good. While the Soviet Union must start speaking its truths, too much Oscar petting can be detrimental to the Carter is seeking to achieve. There are exceptions of one type or another of even a great wrongs will be overlooked, and no consideration of the fact that such remarks will not be used.

Dave Mason concert

Editor

Sunday's stirring performance by Dave Mason was a marshall crack in the commercial world, a bit of entertainment jazz by Craig Renn's review. Although Renn's article was accurate and to the point, his coverage was not comprehensive enough to be misleading.

For example, Mason's acoustic guitar work in his opening numbers was never mentioned. The only attention he received was on the strength of his music, which was obviously the only attention the audience was interested in.

The two encores were a testimony to an excellent performance, and the concert audience clearly felt that Mason was the star of the show. This concert probably turned the financial tide for the A.S. I. Concert Committee and the music industry in general.

We feel it deserves a more adequate representation.

Speaking for myself, and I'm sure for a lot of others, I would like to thank all the concerned students, alumni and especially the Inter-Fraternity Council whose Poly 'P' Committee in the struggle to save tradition and most importantly the Cal Poly "P" on the hill over the dorms.

There has been many a time I've looked at the "P" from across town and felt proud to be a part of that school and its tradition. Without your support SAC probably wouldn't have defended the proposal to soundly (file against, six feet). Now what's left is the continuation of the arch of the "P" that Rally has been trying to accomplish all year.
SAC grants reprieve for Poly 'P'

Student Affairs Council voted Wednesday night to uphold the tradition of the Cal Poly "P", abating a move to have the landmark removed.

John Chasuk, council representative from Architecture and Environmental Design and the leader of the remove-the-
"P" forum, started off almost two hours of discussion citing environmental destruction caused by the cement structure.

The "P" is located about one quarter mile up the hill behind McKeever Hall.

The "P" is in bad need of repair, especially in the upper-end hand corner," voiced Chasuk.

When it was first put up, a lot of other schools were doing the same thing, it was a trend. But our generation is currently more environmentally aware," Chasuk concluded. "Not only is the "P" an eyesore, but it has not been maintained and is environmentally bad."

Chasuk claimed the landmark is causing erosion to the hillside is badly eroded and the only purpose it serves is a place for dorm residents to go and party. There are other places they can go."

Speaking to the spectators, Chasuk said he thought it was good that so many people were in support of the "P". "However," he added, "the representatives have to make a decision." (Continued on page 7)

One-man band in plaza.

Although one man bands seem to have died along with Bojoangles, Bobby Brown yesterday showed that at least one is alive and well.

Brown, 34, entertained a small but enthusiastic crowd in the Union Union plaza Thursday afternoon. A broad-shouldered, blond singer played a collection of handmade instraments and demonstrated a tremendous voice which he said has a six-range octave.

Even though his audience grew larger by the minute, Brown stopped singing after several songs. He declined his first piece to Hawaii, "Because I'll be leaving for there in a couple of days." He plans to ready his second album there in a couple of days. "Brown interrupted his soliciting to plead with a Poly security officer not to ticket him for parking his van in a red zone. Asked what he had said to cause the officer to drive away without ticketing him, Brown replied, "I told him they had made a mistake." (Continued on page 4)

Naturally, no one person is going to "solve" the energy problem singlehandedly; it's going to take a lot of concerned people, working together, to even begin to solve the problems of fuel conservation, wild life preservation, recycling, smog-free rapid transit, fume incineration and water purification.

The thing is... as concerned as we are about these problems, and others, at PG&E we don't think "concern" is enough. The concern has to motivate action. And that's what we're coming to grips with.

Here-and-now, how-to realities.

So, if you're a "how-to" person, a person who's more than an idealistic abstractionist, there may be an opportunity for you with us to work toward solutions to problems that concern you.

Sure, we've got the establishment benefits that are more than an idealistic abstractionist, there may be an opportunity for you with us to work toward solutions to problems that concern you.

Don't look now, but you are being followed. No, not by grumpy little men with fedora hats carrying violin cases or by overgrown monkeys with coke bottle glasses. You are being followed by Mr. Time himself: Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday...

And now that you have arrived safely at the weekend doorway, don't look back. Take a leap into Happy 54 Hours Land and see what there is to do.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL: There are two games this weekend in Cowbell Gym. Friday night's game is against CSU-Fresno. It begins at 6 p.m. Saturday's game is against Pepperdine University and begins at 3:30 p.m. Price of admission is $1 general public and 50 cents for students. If you can't make it, so the game, however, tune in to KCBR and listen to Randy Kerstoon, Dennis Steers, Jack Bledsoe and Randy Bahr giving you live action coverage.

WHALE WATCHING: The California gray whales are migrating along the coast and watching excursions are scheduled from Vina's Landing in Morro Bay. The boats run at 8 a.m. and 1 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday. The cost is $5 for adults, $3 for children and free for small children. Special rates are available for field trips.

SAN LUIS OBISPO BIKE CLUB: This weekend take your way with others to acquire places. On Saturday a ride to Cambria by way of Highway 1 is scheduled and on Sunday the cyclists plan to ride to Whale Rock Dam and Highway 46. Both trips leave at 9:30 a.m. from the steps of Mission San Luis Obispo.

CHILDREN'S DINNER: The Cal Poly Chinese Student Association is sponsoring a sit-down dinner with curry chicken, broccoli with beef, almond pudding and sweet and sour pork. It will be held on Saturday at 6 p.m. at the San Luis Veterans Memorial Building and tickets are $5 per dinner. They can be ordered by calling Stella Louis, 563-1463 or Hanford Chen, 544-7078.

SKI SWAP MEET: Trade, sell or buy your ski equipment. The meet, sponsored by the Cal Poly Ski Club, will be held at 10:30 a.m. from noon to 6 p.m. on Sunday.

WRESTLING AND SWIMMING: Cal Poly wrestlers meet Stanford Friday night and UC Berkeley on Saturday night. Both matches begin at 8 p.m. Price is $2 general public, $1 students, $5 for children ages 6-12. For a relaxing day at the pool, come watch Cal Poly against CSU Fresno at the outdoor pool at 1 p.m. on Saturday. If you just feel like sitting at home this weekend, try out the Happy Days special on Saturday night at 8 p.m. It's an anniversary show with flashbacks of so-called "happy" days of the 50's.

Art display on black experience

by LAURA CHRISTIAN
Daily Staff Writer
Ebony Showcase—an exhibit of black art coordinated by the Black Students Union and sponsored by the Ethnic Program Board—is now on display at the Galerie in the upstairs of the University Union.

Claude Smith, a member of the Black Students Union and one of the exhibit's organizers, said the oil paintings, pen and ink sketches, pen and ink drawings, wood carvings and the various other artwork on display all work together to make a statement about the black experience in America.

Smith said the exhibit was made in conjunction with Black Heritage Month and he hopes it will give the Cal Poly student body an insight into black Americans.

Smith said he had heard some negative response about the exhibit. He feels how a person perceives the art exhibit has much to do with the person's own personal experiences.

"It is something like watching "Roots" to me," Smith said. "When I look at the art there I can see my own roots. I can relate things in the paintings to experiences in my own life, whereas, while people may not be able to see anything but the brush lines.

All of the art on display was done by black artists, Smith said. He said most of the work came from Kuumba—a black art association in Fresno. There were a few Cal Poly students who displayed pieces, Smith said.

Smith said all the artists allowed their work to be displayed without charge.

Special to the Daily

A Cal Poly student can direct a visitor to the University tearooms, or the library but what about the Old Powerhouse, Modoc Barracks or Herdsmen's Hall? Great buildings remain tucked away on campus that any student don't know exist.

Drawn with an arched stained glass window over the doors, the Powerhouse is the oldest building on campus. Built in 1908, it served as an electrical powerhouse until the university department inherited it in the early 1960's.

The Powerhouse was known for the warning whistle on the building, fondly nicknamed "Ferdinand." According to Hel Genthner, head of Special Collections in the Cal Poly Library, the whistle blew everyday at noon and also as a fire whistle. "Ferdinand" was silenced when the navy moved in.

The Powerhouse is located next to the metallurgical lab, Crandall Gymnasium.

The "jungle," a group of buildings in back of the Dexter library. The buildings, officially named Hillcrest, Monterey, Thomas Hall, Sonoma Hall, Mariposa Hall, and Tuolumne Hall, are currently being used as temporary architecture laboratories. Built as barracks for navy students in 1941 and 1947, their dull appearance has been livened by the archie student's subtle touches. "The Jungle" appears in bold letters on one of the buildings. The archies' "Z" lab was once the naval cafeteria.

Modoc was also built when the navy was here. Located next to Poly Grove, Modoc is flanked by a tennis court, a jogging track, and the baseball field. Modoc houses social science, business, and political science faculty offices.

"I draw my students a map on how to find my office when I give them the syllabus at the beginning of the quarter," said Dr. John Fisher, a political science instructor at Cal Poly, who has an office in Modoc.

Herdsmen's Hall is a little known dorm out by the beef unit. It looks like a house with six bedrooms, a living room, and bathroom. Six male agriculture majors live there.

"According to Hel Genthner, one of the residents, he and the other five living there work at the beef unit, feeding the bulls and working on maintenance."

Genthner estimates the hall was built in the 1930's. The "cottages" are three small houses on the edge of the campus as one enters past the President's house.

Before 1928, one of the cottages was the President's house. Past Cal Poly President Nicholas Riciardi lived there from 1921-1924 and Dr. Benjamin Caradal in 1924. Today the cottages house department offices.

Cottage number one houses the Psychology department, number two is split between Natural Resources Management, Home Economics and Psychology, and number three is all NRM.

One-man band brings music

"I think the guys taking the picture (for the Mustang Daily) did more than I did," Brown said.

Brown said he wants to produce his next album himself because the record industry will not be able to change it. "Most songs fit in their formulas. When they know people are buying my album, they'll say, 'Oh yeah, strange things do sell.'"

The All-American javelin thrower plans to take the finished album to a record company this summer because "in some way, you have to get into the industry. "I want to put things like setting up appointments into other people's hands and concentrate on music. I want to reach as many people as I can."

Brown, whose appearance at Poly was his first, is returning to his home of Santa Barbara after a tour of UC Davis, UC Berkeley and several other places such as flea markets and swap meets. He plans to return to Cal Poly when he comes back from Hawaii.
A freshman with a heavy load

by COREY BRITTON
Daily Stall Writer

Entering college can be a traumatic experience. It is hard enough to select the classes, get accustomed to the living situations and the food, let alone go out for a sport on a varsity team as a freshman.

Tom Mount, the Mustangs' 126-pound wrestler, has met the challenge of entering school and taking more time to go out for a sport. He has been learning wrestling at El Camino Junior College, and now he is working towards a college degree.

"The things that I've looked forward to in life have been the Olympics. My biggest goal is to go to Moscow and get a gold medal in 1980," Mount said.

He has put a lot of work into his sport, starting at about age five when he was sent to a wrestling camp at El Camino. Since then, he has wrestled summers until he was on his high school team in Spring Valley for three years. The training must have done some good, because Mount placed fourth in the California Interscholastic Federation competition as a sophomore and senior during high school.

Mount has accumulated a 20-11 record in competition so far this season, and will be taking some action in this month and early March, barring any injuries.

"Grinning as he was talking about the gold medal he is going to win," Mount said that he is now in constant training.

"Training for something like the Olympics is not something that you do on the spur of the moment. You must be in constant training.

Four years ago he groomed for the 1976 Olympic Games, in which he was an alternate. He lost to Joe Bode from Oregon in the final match of Olympic trial competition 15-14. Mount went to Montana as an alternate.

"I learned so much last summer. If I improve at that rate now, I hope to be there (Olympics) in 1980," Mount said.

This year has been a big learning experience for Mount. Last year he was a wrestling rookie at Mt. Miguel High School, while wrestlers at Cal Poly use a collegiate style, which is a big difference.

"The transition from freestyle wrestling to collegiate style wrestling is a big change and I am pleased with how I am doing right now. By the time nationals come out, I hope to have learned enough to make a good showing there," Mount said.

There is still plenty of time for the 18-year-old mechanical engineering major from Lemon Grove to show what he can do, as there are four meets left this month, and one in February. The Western Regionals will be held here in March prior to the national competitions in Norman, Oklahoma.

Mount would like to pursue some more wrestling after he wins his gold medal and secures his degree from Cal Poly this spring. "I would like to work with a corporation that deals with solar energy of some sort," he said.

He has thought of professional wrestling. "Professional wrestling" is actually a bad term to use. It should be labeled "professional mat acting," Mount said.

Men like Pat Patterson and the "Masked Marvel" build it up in the rings and get fake screams from the audience during a match that is pre-decided before either one of them steps into the ring.

His future, as far as staying in the sport, would be limited to do-a-hit-and-get-away, and Mount is working towards the sport.

"I will only be 22 by the next Olympics, and I could have two or three more Olympics ahead of me. I will keep improving," Mount said.

For being only 18, and 22 during the next Olympics, he has some mighty high dreams.

"If I feel the chances are good for a gold medal, I will take off winter and spring, and then train all day every day for the Olympics," Mount said.

Women on a skid

The women's basketball team slipped below the .500 mark Wednesday night when they lost to UC Santa Barbara, 66-59. Unfortunately for the Mustangs' JSCM didn't help them any. Jill Oreck was the leading scorer with 18 points, but the Gauchos pulled away late in the first half and didn't do their best job. Stanford has some good people that could put some pressure on some of our guys. It should be a good game."

Coach Vaughan Hitchcock said.

But still, that is a long time away, and Mount is working towards it.

"I learned so much last summer. If I improve at that rate now, I hope to be there (Olympics) in 1980," Mount said.

"If we anticipation our toughest match this weekend against Berkeley. They have potential to beat us as I don't do our best job. Stanford has some good people that could put some pressure on some of our guys. I should be a good game."

Both matches will be held in the Main Gym, and both start at 8 p.m. Admission is $2 general, and $1 for students.

Women netters at UCSB

The women's tennis team will open their season at the UC Santa Barbara Invitational today. The three will wind-up tomorrow. Sixteen teams will participate in the tourney including schools from Arizona and all over California.

Heather Coyte will lead the women. She is the number one girl, followed by Nancy Williams, Carla Bauta, Jana Frischknecht, and Kaye Weinstock.

Coach Head Coach Sonja Murray's squad will have their first Southern California Athletic Association match here on Feb. 18, against UCSB.

Men's tennis hosted Stanford

The Cal Poly wrestling team will try to make out winning a match when they tangle with Stanford and UC Berkeley tomorrow night.

"This was our most successful road trip through the Midwest since we started in 1970. The match did a nice job of the entire trip," Hitchcock said.

The road trip consisted of University of Montana, Iowa State, Nebraska-Omaha and Northern Iowa, all in four days.

"We knew that our team was tired, but we had to wrestle and they still performed in a workmanlike manner the entire trip and gave us their best," Hitchcock said.

The upset of Iowa State was noted as Cal Poly's not its first upset in history. The Mustangs won the match 18-16.

Injuries, the worst word in any sport, have still been the major concern of the Mustangs. Kim Watch (153) injured his ribs during the meet against Nebraska-Omaha, and will be out for two weeks. Benje Williams (134) injured a nerve in his neck and will be out for two weeks.

On the bright side heavyweight Dan Hare still returns after being sidelined since Jan. 18, and Mark DiGirolamo, the 1978 national champion, didn't go to school, until winter quarter and Hitchcock did not think that he was ready for competition until tonight.

"We anticipate our toughest match this weekend against Berkeley. They have potential to beat us as I don't do our best job. Stanford has some good people that could put some pressure on some of our guys. I should be a good game."

Both matches will be held in the Main Gym, and both start at 8 p.m. Admission is $2 general, and $1 for students.

Basketball player of the week

Gerald Jones From Oakland, the 6'5" forward is Cal Poly's leading scorer. In the 74 to 73 double overtime loss to Cal Poly Pomona Jones had seven rebounds and scored 17 points. He was the leading scorer in the 55 to 48 Mustang win over Northern Illinois. His team won one fast out against eleven attempts for eighteen points. Jones is a 2nd-year starter and has pro basketball capabilities.
Tennis season opens with new coach

Former Cal Poly and Arizona High school star Pete Lambert takes up the fifth position. Lambert has been a 13 time state champion, four years with his brother, Dan, formed a standout doubles team at Arroyo Grande High. They reached the Southern CIF quarterfinals in 1976. Pete was Northern League No. 1 champion in 1971. The pair teamed up at Cal Poly and in 1974 were the CCAA No. 1 doubles champions. Pete Lambert finished as the CCAA No. 4 singles champion in 1975 and earned the league's No. 5 title in 1974 and the No. 1 singles crown in 1975 when he was undefeated in singles and doubles. In 1974 the Lambert brothers reached the NCAA Division II doubles quarterfinals.

Cal Poly returns its 1977 regionals doubles partners, Jim Holst, a junior, potted a 5-4, 5-4, 4-6, 6-2 win over Ron Berryhill and the No. 2 singles spot as Cal Poly now has a shot at the NCAA Division II doubles quarterfinals.
