Deep sea fishing catching

by JANE ERIEHEMERY

For those who can drag yourselves out of bed at 5 a.m., there's a sport made for you—deep sea fishing. You can take a fishing boat out from Morro Bay or Avila Beach pier and probably catch the limit.

Port San Luis Sport Fishing in Avila has been leaving every morning at 7 a.m. The Marauder, Chayenne and Diablo head 20 miles down the coast to Port Sal (just south of Vandenberg Air Force Base) where day fish mainly for rock fish.

Mr. Marauder asked Tuesday carrying about 40 people on board including the skipper and four deck hands. After cutting through the chilly water for over an hour the ropes snapped and a voice over the P.A. system boomed:

"O.K. gang, let your lines down about 20 feet. The fish are thick as cement right here."

The voice, belonging to Al Chapman, the owner of the Cheyenne, had several indications as to where to find fish. Birds on the surface of the water imply fish below but most of the time there are no birds around.

Chapman's sure fire way of locating them is using radar, a machine, using radar, spots the fish and sends the findings on paper. The "fish finder" is responsible for keeping the best doing during the trip in search of fish.

For the past few weeks the fish have been plentiful but smaller than usual. The conditions of deep sea fishing change often—wind, swell, times and sizes of fish and weather are all variable, says Chapman.

"These fish are smaller than the ones I usually get but I still like it. I can use the fish for the fun of it," said a veteran from Bakersfield.

Case for a day's fishing with Port San Luis Sport Fishing ranges from $15 to $20 depending on whether you use your own or rent equipment and how many times you lose your lure.

A couple of things to remember if you are planning a trip deep sea fishing. Dress warmly—it's cold and the sea produces wind that won't come out of day. And just to be safe you might want to bring along a few dramamal pills. Chapman says 20 per cent of the people get seasick on each boat. This reporter can attest to that.

Wine savored for those of age

by MARY JANE ALLEN

To spend your summer afternoon in some beautiful country among good company, try visiting any of eight wineries along the coast on weekends.

They are located in a hundred-mile stretch from Paso Robles in the Santa Ynez Valley. There are almost 10,000 acres in this area, made up of about 30 different vineyards.

From north to south the wineries are Hoffman Mountain Ranch, Ross Helm, Dr. Charles, Paso Robles, Adelaida Road, York Mountain, Mount Veek, Monte Rosso and Santa Barbara by Dr. Charles and Paso Robles Winery.

You don't have to be a connoisseur of good wines to enjoy such a pleasant pastime. The only thing required is an interest in learning about this fascinating grape.

What really is wine? The answer has many forms, for wine is something different to each individual depending on his character and his sophistication.

Wine enthusiasts, avid drinkers may metaphysically describe wine as a bottle of sunshine; the gourmet may say wine is a gratification for body and soul; the mystic might claim that wine is a gift from Heaven bestowed upon this corrupt world; and the pragmatist may see wine as simply the fermented juices of grapes. There is truth in all such answers because wine is truly many things.

To David Hoffman, part owner of Hoffman Mountain Ranch, wine is something very special: "We take special care in making our wines," said Hoffman. "And I personally feel they are one of the best."

Beginners at wine tasting may find it impossible to distinguish between a good wine and bad wine. But the most important thing to remember is that a good wine is one that appeals to you.

Pet's need care while vacationing

by THOMAS B.LA HUX

There are times when you may want to take your faithful companion (dog or cat) on an outing. Whether to the beach or to the mountains, you may be wondering what your animal's well being when traveling that must be considered.

One common problem, especially in animals unaccustomed to traveling, is motion sickness. The symptoms include vomiting, excessive salivation and vomiting. One solution is to give an anti-nauseant. These are available through your veterinarian. An alternative solution would be to use anti-motion sickness drugs such as Dramamine. It gives satisfactory control of motion sickness in dogs when administered 30 minutes before traveling, in an oral dose of 2 mg per pound of body weight.

The best solution for preventing motion sickness is to get your animal accustomed to car travel by taking it on short trips whenever possible. Ideally, start when the animal is young. Let it look out the car window as early as possible while it is young.

Heat stroke can also occur when animals are suddenly transported to a hot climate to which they have not been acclimated.

Young animals, fat animals, short naced dogs and older animals are most susceptible to heat stroke. The condition is aggravated by lack of water. Clipping a long haired dog will not prevent heat stroke.

Symptoms of heat stroke include: passing, increased pulse rate, rapid and shallow breathing, weakness in the hindquarters, collapse. If the dog is allowed to continue in this state, the temperature for only a very short time before suffering brain damage or even death.

The first step in treatment of heat stroke is to cool the animal by hosing and sponging with cold water, immersing in cold water or apply ing icy packs all over its body with special attention to the head and chest.

Then get the animal to a veterinarian to be examined and to continue sponging and cooling with water. If this is impossible, the temperature should be checked frequently over the next 24 hours. High temperatures often recur after the first signs of improvement.

If you are traveling by car with you on a warm day, carry water with you and give it small amounts frequently. If the animal must be left inside the car, leave the windows open in the shade and leave plenty of water.

Go take a hike!

If you’ve ever had the urge to escape your usual routine and get a little closer to nature, why not?

Many Californians are enjoying backpacking or hiking as a pastime and means of escape, exploring coastline and mountain trails. Central Coast hikers are fortunate to have one of the most accessible and beautiful coastline areas within a few short miles at Montana de Oro State Park near Los Osos. The park has an estuary, sand dunes, gum forest, Heron Rookery and other, scenery unique to the setting.

During the summer, daily nature hikes are conducted for the public under the guidance of park officials. Hikes planned for July include a Reservoir Trail plant hike, Mudflats Trail discovery walk, Heron Rookery, Los Osos oaks natural history hike, Black Mountain walk and the Coon Creek hike.

More difficult hikes are the Oates Peak and Valencia Peak trails, which top the mountains and run along the high Valencia Peak hikers can enjoy a view of almost 100 miles on a clear day. Coastline is visible from Piedras Blancas at the north to Point San at the southern end.

The next scheduled hike is tomorrow's Heron Rookery walk, beginning at 10 a.m. at the park museum. A calendar of daily hikes and other activities at the park is available at the museum.

Summer busy for ASI

The decrease in men’s athletic funds from $95 thousand to $91 thousand will not deter from the strong athletic program at Cal Poly, according to newly elected ASI President Paul Curtis.

The women's and men's athletic boards have signed a two-year contract with ASI which entitles scholarship funds to come out of each department in the form of gate receipts. Curtis said, "Cal Poly has a very strong athletic program for the amount of money it receives." Curtis said, "I feel, and the athletic boards feel, that they can make it."

This summer, ASI also is trying to instigate a legal aid program on campus. ASI also hopes to begin preparations for a teacher evaluation program which could be initiated in 1978. Students will evaluate their teachers and the results will be announced publicly.

Chicago Tracksters attend camp

Twenty-two Chicago area high school students are visiting Poly for 12 days as they attend the Cal Poly Wax Coast Track Camp. The camp, brainchild of Poly's head coach Steve Miller, will run through Monday. Its purpose is to provide instruction in and an awareness of Cal Poly, according to Miller.

The camp, said Miller, a coach in Chicago area high schools for 11 years before coming to Cal Poly last year, "is geared to provide instruction in both actual training and a nightly film session."

In addition to the lab training, the students also participated in a track meet at Hancock College and were another one scheduled Tuesday at Santa Barbara City College.

BIKE LANE

BIKE LANE—Punda for the last repairs have been made through the 1977-78 Los Olivos City budget. The $16,000 approved by the City Council will go toward the resurfacing of streets opened four times. The repairs covered the streets opened by a soil put out by the city a few months ago making them flat and passable for people, he said.

City Engineer Wayne Peterson said the widening of Orcutt Road from Laurel Lane to Broad Street opens in June, he said.

Perhaps a visit to Piru's Cove isn't on your list of things to do this weekend, but a few of the following may appeal.

ARROYO GRANDE PLAY: The Orchard Players will perform in "Black Comedy" tonight, Friday and Saturday in the Magic Playground Theater in Arroyo Grande. Tickets for the 8 p.m. performances each night are $3 for general admission and $1.50 for senior citizens and those under 18. Reservations are advised and can be made by calling 489-1331, ext. 65, or 489-7820.

CHICKEN BARBECUE: Organizers of Arroyo Grande's Harvest Festival will hold a chicken barbecue Saturday, July 16. The fund raiser for the annual October festival will run from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Arroyo Grande First Baptist Church, Halcyon Road. Cost is $2 for adults and $1 for children. The meal includes chicken, bread, beans, salad, salsa and beverages.

COUNTY MUSEUM: If you want to learn something about the area, the County Museum will fascinate you for hours. The museum, at Broad and Monterey Streets, is open daily except Monday from 10 a.m. to noon and 1 to 4 p.m.

MOVIES: The Sunset Drive-in is showing "The Recruit" and "No Deposit, No Return." At the Pismo, "Mahogany" and "A Star is Born" are playing and an X-rated show will begin at midnight Friday and Saturday. The Madonna has "A Bridge Too Far," while "The Heretic" and "Obsession" are at the Bay Theatre in Morro Bay. "Annie Hall" is at the Pine Tree. "A Bridge Too Far" is playing at the Freeway.
