Kid's center gets space answer

The Cal Poly Children's Center workers have been assured it will stay on campus. The center workers were informed that the building they occupy would have to be vacated by the end of fall quarter.

All temporary facilities north of the library will be torn down or moved to make way for the newly funded library. This includes Child Development offices, architecture labs and the Children's Center.

The Children's Center provides day care service to students and faculty. Because of a lack of communication with the administration so far the center's fate, parents and employees were concerned.

The administration had always planned on moving out of the temporary buildings for the Children's Center, says Missy Deneberg, coordinator of the center, after receiving a phone call from Pres. Kennedy. However, the center was never informed of these plans.

"The major thing that came out of the confusion was that it's really Kennedy who is backing us, but because they hadn't made a definite decision we hadn't heard yet," said Deneberg.

Kennedy made us a promise and we are depending on that," added Danneberg. "Earlier this month, we were informed of these working with children. It actually came out to be a better situation than before. We learned we have a lot more support from Pres. Kennedy and we appreciate it. We will also have a better situation with Child Development," said Deneberg. "Kennedy made us a promise and we are depending on that.

Got any dynamic, exciting plans for the next couple of years? We do.

Hotline training offered

Hotline, San Luis Obispo's telephone crisis intervention service, is looking voluntarily.

We are looking for any people that are non-judgmental," said Sue, a Hotline staff member. "For example, someone who is completely against homosexuality would obviously not be desirable. We need people to sympathetically listen, not to judge.

The crisis intervention service, now in its second year, receives some 1,200 calls a month.

"People call up for both physical and emotional reasons," Sue said. "Anything from a woman who applied for a job and was threatened by a physical violence to three to four people a month saying they are contemplating suicide.

The Hotline series, open 24 hours a day, is staffed by people from students to the elderly. "We are not a group of professional counselors, just people who are in a phase that sometimes we all need someone to listen to us, without forcing any opinions at all," Sue said. "Interviews for prospective Hotline volunteers will be held August 10 and 11. For more information, ask Hotline 544-0162.

News briefs

One option for cooling off is the summer’s intramural swim meet open to all Poly students. It will be held in the outdoor pool on Aug. 8. Check it begins at 6 p.m. The meet is free.

Following five reported vehicle burglaries at beach locations, the Sheriff’s department urges citizens to protect themselves from this type of crime by leaving valuables at home and lock purses or wallets in the trunk rather than inside the car. The persons burglarizing the cars have clearly been looking inside the vehicles to choose which ones to burgle.

The All-American Selections Display Garden is now in bloom at the Ornamental Horticulture unit. The Garden displays 120 different varieties of seed-grown annual flowers and seed-grown vegetables. Self-guided tours through the 5,000 square foot garden are open to the public from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Saturdays until Sept. 13. Admission is free.
