Tutors help others to learn the ropes

By JACK SCHWENKE

Wendy Akadera's face lights up when she talks about the Tutors Center. Instead of having to explain concepts, some students feel that others can explain it to them. "I think that makes more sense to me," she said. "I can understand it more that way."

Loretta Hargraves, a psychology major, has been a tutor for the past year. "I like math because it's cut and dry, there is an answer and on the board it shows you how you're doing," she said. "I just like helping people with math.

Hargraves works eight hours a week within the Tutoring Center and is responsible for helping students understand the concepts that aren't understood in class.

"I like math because it's cut and dry, there is an answer and on the board it shows you how you're doing," she said. "I just like helping people with math.

Hargraves makes up only a portion of the Tutoring Center. There are also fellow students in the Library Learning Assistance Center and the Mathematics Learning Center who work with the students.

"We have a lot of people here who want to help others," she said. "I think that makes more sense to me," she said. "I can understand it more that way."

Hargraves is a sophomore at Cal Poly and is working on a degree in psychology.

The restoration of sound and beauty

By GREG CORMING

The year and a half-old 130-year-old piano is being transformed into an instrument through the careful efforts of Cal Poly students.

The piano, a 130-year-old 130-year-old, was purchased from a local store for $1,000. It was then transported to the music department and set up in a room. However, it was not used until last semester when it was finally tuned. It was then moved to the music department and set up in a room. However, it was not used until last semester when it was finally tuned.

"It's not great, but it's a lot better," said Mike Hernandez, an architecture major. "It's a lot better than what we had before."

Hernandez and his partner, who are in the process of restoring the piano, said they would like to see the piano in use again.

"It's frustrating at times not having the piano," he said. "When we start working, we start working on the piano, and it makes a lot of noise."

Problems with materials also have been encountered in the project. The materials were not of the proper quality and parts were made for the entire thing. "But it's going to work out," said Hernandez. "The materials are not of the proper quality and parts were made for the entire thing. "But it's going to work out," said Hernandez.

The project will take about two or three years to complete. "It's going to take a lot of time," said Hernandez. "It's going to take a lot of time."

Outrage is generated over Prop. 13

Proposition 13's passage will lower my family's standard of living and I oppose it.

1. I am among the many owners who do not demand property taxes. I know mine may decline and you, in reassessment, if Proposition 13 fails.

2. I consider the local services and facilities, which greatly improve my standard of living, to be a vital part of my living environment. Therefore, a reassessment of our property is long overdue.

3. My assessment value has increased by a substantial amount. My property is not empty, it is taxable.

4. My valuation assessment does appear by a board of tax between the high and low.

5. The city is willing to show down to make a clean cut.我用的星

EDITOR: I have received a number of letters from students and parents expressing their dissatisfaction with Proposition 13. It is a matter of concern for all of us.

One letter from a student states:

"Proposition 13 is a disaster for students. It is unfair and unjust. I believe it is the responsibility of the state government to provide quality education for everyone."

Another letter from a parent comments:

"Proposition 13 has led to the closure of many schools and the reduction of educational programs. This is unacceptable and unfair to our children."

Legal aid possible for Poly people

By JILLIE MICHAEL

All Poly students, faculty, and staff in need of legal aid may soon have a way to obtain it.

CASTI CANis planning to install a legal aid office on Poly campus near the Engineering and Science Building, and are negotiating with the University to obtain the necessary funds.

CASTI CAN has organized a Group which will provide consultation to Poly students, faculty, and staff. All legal aid services are free of charge.

A legal aid office will be established on Poly campus for consultation with individuals who are interested in obtaining legal aid services.

CASTI CAN is seeking support from the University to obtain the necessary funds and to obtain a location for the legal aid office.

Higher learning from the ground up

The sounds of constructionfill the air at the site of the Robert W. Kennedy Library. The five-story, 200,000 square foot (47 acre) library is being built north of the existing library. The new library will provide 5,000 reader stations and a stack capacity of 200,000 volumes to serve the projected planned enrollment of 15,000 full-time registered students.

Rocks were removed Dec. 10, 1978 from six general contractors. Lee Bolinger was Robert W. McComas, Inc., from Los Angeles with a bid of $21,000,000, some 13 percent under the architect's estimate of $24,000,000. Construction began March 6, 1975. The library is scheduled to be completed Aug. 9, 1979.

At groundbreaking ceremonies last March 17, Ray Breugh, chairman of the SJCUC Board of Trustees, announced the library would be named after Kennedy, in commemorating the handing of the library.

"The program we participate in today would not have taken place were it not for the extraordinary dedication of President Kennedy and his staff toward the dedicated Cal Poly faculty, (and) the enthusiastic students."
