Jury selection narrows for 'Diablo 20'

BY JANET KRISTENBERG

More than 300 people have been summoned or relieved from jury duty for the trial of 10 protesters who blocked the Diablo Canyon nuclear power plant, said Gail Dunan, spokeswoman for the District Attorney's office.

Today is the third day of the prosecution and defense have questioned people and Dunan said the selection of 12 jurors may be completed by Friday.

"It has been difficult to find impartial people because of all the media attention," said Dunan. "People are finding a certain amount of problems in not letting information they have gained before being interviewed affect them.

At one point, the defense pointed out the "smell of the fuel" and the "smell of power," etc., but the defense implications have made it a big deal.

As far as bias is concerned, we have said, interviewees are also having trouble dividing their minds on nuclear power, whether for or against.

"It would be hard for anyone," she said, "but it isn't much more than a two-bit change, but the social implications have made it a big deal."

In the course of the trial, we were asked to pick alternate jurors and he has not indicated one way or the other his feelings.

As with almost any jury selection, said Dunan, there has been much discussion between the prosecution and the defense in choosing jurors.

He added that either group could pick 12 jurors out of the many people interviewed, not one would be duplicated.

At one extreme, the prosecution would love to find 12 people who were primarily conservative, voted Republican in the last election. At the other extreme is the defense who would love 12 people who either were liberal, voted Democrat and think the nuclear power is the greatest thing since sliced bread, etc., said Dunan.

A fair chance

Most minority groups have fought for and won their promised civil rights. Discrimination comes closer to extinction every day. Yet one minority group is continuously discriminated against and can do virtually nothing about it. Ex-cons do not stand a fair chance in society when they are released from prison.

Ex-cons face two overwhelming obstacles—legal restrictions and the stigma attached to parole officers.

Restriction of rights for ex-cons is inexcusable; the legal restriction is parole—approximately 85 percent of the convicts in California are on parole; and to do certain things that many people take for granted.

Some parolees are not allowed to drink, get a driver's license or be married without a parole officer's permission. Others must not change residences without notifying their parole officers and are prohibited from leaving the state until the probation period is up.

The social stigma attached to former prisoners is staggering. They are not looked upon as equals, but as tramps, as potential criminals. An ex-cons does get a job, which is not easy, he is not trusted fully. The slightest error or misjudgment could be cause for his firing.

The parolee's legal and personal problems are immense when he first comes out of prison. In most states, he is given only oral instructions about the rules governing his conditional release and the parole officer who supervises him must contact him with 24 hours. Federal parolees are not even given a list of the rules of parole. If not an impossibility, most ex-cons are only unskilled or semiskilled, and the combination is a problem for all parolees, even further.

In most states, laws prevent former prisoners from being employed in certain types of jobs. They cannot possess alcohol, a television set, etc., for example, thus placing a number of jobs off limits. The restaurant industry, one of the few fields open to semiskilled laborers, yet most establishments will liquor. The fact that food-related television news people.

Bill Burton, a man who provides commentary for Los Angeles TV station KNTV, leveled hard blows against this murderer, Dan White, a former city supervisor. He claimed that Mayor Moscone refused to reappoint White to his former post, just days after he resigned and then changed his mind. Scovell has been alive and in the city for some time and Monti has had time to better town and gown relations than anyone.

We believe the incidents should have been given as much coverage as it received, but add that the first three journalists were shot to death and some others injured spurred the media action. We feel that the city needs to do even before the mass suicide took place.

The horrendous events in South America left us cold, bitter. It is a tough to imagine anything like that happening. We were especially shocked by the news of the brutal details of the three newsmen—one newsman—one reporter, one photographer, and the lack of lives they lived while trying to pursue the story.

Most who covered the story did it tastefully and thoroughly, many searched the incident for side stories. Stories that allow us to see, through a picture painted by the media, a story of humanity and heroism that were sexually.

The telegrams and film were exciting, the stories were colorful and interesting, the news was hard-hitting and irresistible, but through it all we felt a sense that something, some we had never seen before. Every media jumped on the story, and we heard, according, up-to-the-minute reports, Anderson, KRON, and others.

A letter from an inmate

I am writing to convey any misinterpretations that may have been conveyed by "Ernie" in his November. If cartoon commemoration the passing of America's most famous anthropologist, Dr. Margaret Mead.

First, and most importantly, Dr. Mead was an ethnologist (a student of contemporary cultures). Since she was neither a primatologist nor a paleoanthropologist, she never wrote anything entitled "The Story of Primitive Peoples."

All of her researches were carried out among people who are every bit as human as you or I. In fact, Dr. Mead contributed significantly to the recognition that all peoples—regardless of differences in skin color, styles of dress, eating habits, language, technology and beliefs—are fully and equally human. Being different in any or all of these respects does not make one a "primitive."

Secondly, let Ernie also be informed that ape's have no tails.

Letters

This is in response to Sylvia Deloney's letter of November 16, 1976.

Sylvia's letter to the Reader's Homecoming Host and Nestens page was very poorly timed. We felt, although the page lasted until 10:00 p.m., it was well planned and some of her comments were uncalled for.

The page did not start late—a side note on the was scheduled to begin at 7:30 p.m. and the actual page began at 8 p.m. as

The questions that were asked were fair. The Host and Nestens Page is not a forum for questions to be answered by authors, editors, or anyone else in an attempt to elicit a response.

We are not defending White, just the rights of accused people.

We were not at the scene of the crime and therefore must not be made to feel that the people who wish to express their views should not be allowed to do so.

Other news programs, even one on Santa Maria's NBC TV, commented on the trial.

The biggest tip of all was when Associated Press, in the rare use of other media to "get the story right" instead of a smooth connection with the McGeorge-Pickman parolery system.

There was never any evidence of this and it was very confusing to anyone who had any interest in the case. White was extremely disappointed that the San Luis Obispo County Telegram-Tribune ran fast news which created the impression of a fair chance in today's paper.

Editors:

Jay Whitehead's letter (November 21) is an excellent example of what some people believe "good towns and great relationships." The fact that the city of Las Vegas was not mentioned in the article is not due to any sociological relationship. But several things have no basis in fact. Whitehead's letter was a great disappointment to all of us and many others, including the residents, to President Robert Kennedy.
Mopeds create confusion on campus

BY PAULA KRBOCL

Mopeds seem to be suffering from a split personality crisis among students. Although they are motorized like a motorcycle and can be ridden in traffic, they are still classified as bicycles by the American Cancer Society, which means they cannot be ridden in traffic with cars, as well as in the bike lane posted by the campus police department on a recent report.

The moped is classified as a bicycle because it doesn't need to be registered. A moped doesn't require a special form of license, which is required for motorcycles. Yet, the moped is powerful enough to be driven like a motorcycle and can be ridden in traffic with cars, as well as in the bike lane.

"People aren't following the rules on mopeds. They're going too fast, riding on sidewalks, and going in the opposite lane on campus," said Brug.

We asked the police department to help study the use of mopeds on campus to decide when regulations are needed for their use.

"A lot of people are concerned about the pedestrian's safety," Brug said. "Let's hope being registered, they can be returned when stolen." Though, he said, there haven't been many thefts of mopeds on campus and the number of bike thefts is probably less than the nationwide average.

A downtown moped dealer, Bob Miller, insisted that "mopeds are safe. He estimated that 70-75 percent of the mopeds he sold went to women from 18 to 25 years of age, but added that people 18 years old to 75 years old buy them.

Blackouts? Brownouts? In California?

Well, not really, not yet. But over the next 10 or 15 years, electric shortages are inevitable, unless more power plants can be built.

Even though all of us continue to conserve electricity, power plants are expected to double by 1999.

Because California's still a growing state, there are more people needing homes and jobs and other things that depend on electricity. And the law requires that PG&E provide adequate electric service to everyone.

So, five to ten years or more to bring in a new power plant into operation, so it's important that we start now. But governmental approval of all kinds are needed to build these new power plants.

And the approval process has slowed down to such a point that it may cause power shortages in the 1970s. Power rationing is needed.

At the same time, no one can afford to cut back on conservation. We must all conserve electricity in every way we can.

We don't like to be the ones to tell you about the possibility of shortages, but don't tell you the facts would be a gross disservice.

If you have any questions, we'd like to hear from you. Just write:
PG&E, P.O. Box 3799, San Francisco, CA 94126.

To keep things running in the 1980's, we must begin new power plants today.

A dog was found with rabies in the county.

The department provides low-cost rabies clinics around January each year. It costs no more than $5.50 to have pets vaccinated at the clinics.

Three rabid dogs were found about five months ago in Santa Barbara County, said Framberger, but the animals were all found within a few days of each other.

The department is trying to become completely self-supported through revenue from fines, pet adoptions and license fees. Framberger hired three employees, eight patrol vehicles and food supplies are kept circulating on a $331,000 yearly budget.

Although the department is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Framberger said people are available for help 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Puppies and kittens as well as adult animals are available for adoption. Dogs under four months old cost $5.50. Shots not included. Older dogs cost $10.40, plus vaccination and license fees. All cats cost $3.15 plus a neuter deposit.

The department is located a few miles north of San Luis Obispo on Highway 1 and the number to call is 544-4705.

49ers explain about Thomas sign

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Part of a sign which read, "Blame Jim Thomas," the management of the San Francisco 49ers ordered the banner taken down during the team's game against the Pittsburgh Steelers, a newspaper reported today.

The San Francisco Chronicle said that according to the author of the sign, Jerry Fitch, it was removed Monday night by GNP security men on the orders of its owner, the front of owner Eddie DeBartolo Jr. "A security man said it was against the law to have orders from the 49ers administration to take the sign down," the Chronicle said today, "but it might cause a riot. You can put it up after the game." The sign was removed after a 3-0 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Men win 84-52, Evans pane 10

The big men of the season are yet to come but for now the Cal Poly basketball team is content with opening 1978 with 2-0. Tuesday night the Mustangs defeated a school named United States International University 84-52.

Led by newcomer Ernie Wheeler, who doesn't like to be reminded he is the coach's son, the Mustangs made 52 percent of their shots from the floor and were perfect from the charity line (16-for-16). Poly led at half 50-22 to make it two in a row for Ernie Wheeler, the coach, who enters his seventh year as the head of Cal Poly Basketball. The graduate of the University of Washington has won 15 while losing 48 during his stay in San Luis Obispo.

Ernie Wheeler, the athlete, stole the ball three times in one stretch and scored 12 points. Leading scorer—for the Mustangs was the only returning starter from last year's second place club, Mike Evans, with 16 points. Every player on the team played and Pat Ross, six-foot (11-inch) center was the only Mustang who didn't score. Forward Mark Robinson added 15. Dave McCracken, who led the Mustangs with 10 against Redlands, and Rob Wrage had 4 each.

USIU is 0-2 and was led by Tom Cody who scored 13 points. Patrick Kooner led both teams with seven rebounds. Mark Robinson and Andy Gust each had six boards for Cal Poly.

The game was witnessed by a small crowd of 450.

The two non-league games are a tune-up for this weekend when Cal Poly hosts the ninth annual Apple Invitational. UC Davis next Tuesday at home, and Cal State Dominique Hills will pay a return visit Friday for the Mustangs. Friday night in the Main Gym is Friday night was also the championship of the Apple Invitational Friday and Saturday night the championship.
