CSSA expands, adds fundraiser

Poly contributes $1,800 for the new position

Allocations have been made by several state campuses, including $1,800 from Cal Poly, to the Cal State Student Association for general expansion purposes such as instituting a newly formed position of fundraiser.

A position as fundraiser is a one-year job starting in July and paying $1,800 per month, plus 17 percent commission for a total salary not to exceed $17,000 for the first year. The job is open to all CSUC students and seniors.

According to ASI President Larry Robinson, other campuses which made allocations are: Chico State-$1,000, Fresno State-$1,000, San Francisco State-$500, Cal State L.A.-$1,500, Cal State Bakersfield-$3,000, Cal State Northridge-$4,000-$4,500, and San Francisco State-$3,000.

The fundraiser’s responsibilities will be to seek cash donations and grants, develop travel programs and insurance plans on behalf of the CSSA. Currently, there is a balance in the CSSA to seek donations, said Robinson.

With the addition of a fundraiser, CSSA will be able to hire a coordinator, book concerts and night events at Cal State campuses to raise money. The profits will be used to expand student services, said Robinson.

The position requires someone competent in public relations, dealing with people, enthusiastic, has experience in fundraising, and be willing to work in Sacramento, said Robinson.

Applications are available at three locations on campus: the Placement Office, the Dean of Students Office and the ASI office.

Interviews will be held in June. Applications must be completed before June 1.

Robinson said no one from Cal Poly has applied for the position so far.

The idea for the position has been discussed by CSUC’s student organizations for 10 years, according to CSSA lobbyist Craig Jones. The University of California has three student lobbyists in Sacramento, said Jones, but the associated student bodies of most CSUC campuses have been too low on cash.

“Young people just don’t have the money,” said Jones. We added that the student bodies of some campuses would like to hire an extra lobbyist, but have given higher priority to other segments in their budgets. Jones said the first thing the fundraiser would do is work to get tax exempt status for CSSA. By doing this, corporations who donate money to CSSA can deduct the donation from state taxes.

CSSA currently is not tax exempt and is registered as a lobby with the California Secretary of State. Jones said CSSA fundraiser would also solicit labor unions and would apply for some grants.

So far, said Jones, CSSA is about $7,000 short of money to hire the fundraiser. Hayward just added $2,000 to the list of CSUC campus donations, he said.

Station shutdown still in question

Whether or not the county’s gas stations will close this weekend is still in question.

The county chapter of the California Service Station Association was scheduled to meet last night to decide on a proposed strike, which would close about 70 percent of the county’s stations and about 90 percent of the city’s.

A San Francisco lawyer was scheduled to be on tap to give legal advice. John Riley, board chairman for the service station association, said that although county dealers will be acting independently whether to close or open, some worry the shutdown may be illegal. Riley also owns a Chevron station in the county.

“If we don’t have any gasoline and still shutdown, we will be violating an anti-trust law,” said Riley. “We would be thrown in jail for that. What’s next?”

“The Department of Energy tells us when we can sell gas. the governor tells us when we can open, and Chevron tells us when we can get gas,” he said. “It’s annoying for someone supposedly independent.”

Another dealer, Dale Wade, said gas stations are running dry because wholesalers are making late deliveries. Wade owns an ARCO Station on Highway 101 and Los Osos Road. He said he ordered an order for gas last Thursday and didn’t get it until last Sunday.

Wade said he will be closing his station Thursdays and Fridays from now on and stay open on weekends except this weekend.

A association attorney in San Francisco said the shutdown is legal, as long as the association within the association will decide voluntarily to shut down, or stay open, said lawyer Tosti.

ASI voters to elect president-again

Students will be asked again Wednesday and Thursday to turn out to the polls and (try again to elect an ASI president.

Anne Clendenen and Ron Braw will face each other today and tomorrow in a run-off election for president since last week’s election did not give either a majority of votes cast.

Clendenen received 1,300 votes. Braw collected 1,219 and Ted Hanning got 795, with no candidate receiving the necessary 30 percent plus one needed for victory.

The voters, however, did give a clear-cut majority to vice-presidential candidate Jeff Land. Who is chairman of the Student Health Advisory Council. He collected more than 1,700 votes, with his nearest competitor Bob Carpenter receiving less than 700. Joel Miller got 294 votes and finished third.

Twenty percent of Cal Poly’s student body turned out to mark their ballots last Wednesday and Thursday, the highest turnout in ASI election in three years. Student leaders hope for a turn out of at least a figure that in the run-off.

Polling places will be set up on the Library Lawn, in the University Union Plaza, Ag Colony and the Past Office Bldg. They will be open from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., ASI officials said.

Last year’s turnout was about 18 percent, officials said. Such low turnouts have caused student leaders to strive for more involvement in elections.

One university gives out ice cream cones to voters, another gives out free cups of Pepsi. One poll called voting students to decide where they want one dollar of their ASI fees to go.

And while student government people at Cal Poly have not circulated several weeks ago, but the plan was abandoned.

The battleplan that may be used during a possible station shutdown is being readied at Operation Gaswatch" in case dealers okay the plan.

“We don’t know,” said a chamber spokesman in explaining the ballot. “The plan may be used during a possible station shutdown. She said motorists, however, can call the station from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. seven days a week for the latest information on the shutdown.

WHERE HAVE ALL THE VALUES GONE?

You, the original Mr. Wizard.
You speak of truth.
Yet you tell me lies.
You speak of freedom.
Yet you are not free.
You speak of future glory.
Yet you do nothing to attain it.
Tell me, Mr. Wizard.
Why do you forsake me?
Why am I trapped in your invisible eye?
I try to believe what you tell me to be true.
But I don't even know if your truth is true.
Why do you cause me this torment?

Just give me an example
And I will follow your word.
And I will give you a promise.
And I will try to keep it.
Please give me something
For I am only human.
Please give me something
For this human has nothing.
A hope, a dream.
A vision of glory.

Information, please.
The Watergate fallout left a residual of government reform acts throughout the various levels of government. One of the most crucial of these reforms was the re-negotiation of the Freedom of Information Act.

Actually the act was established in 1966 but it became more viable after Watergate in 1974, when it was amended over a veto of President Ford, to give faster access to government data.

The act grants individuals the right to access to information about them on file with government agencies, with exemptions for law enforcement records. Thus the act has seen its growing pains.

In a climate of cynicism and spartanism, the act has proven to be an effective tool for bringing crucial information into the open. The act and the moratorium be put on releasing files coupled with the destruction of booking and lawyer's know-how who want less government aerodynamics are not, away and shredding evidence is not an alternative to a valuable instrument.

New York Times used the act to find out that former President Nixon for his own political benefit and the act was used to learn that the opposition that would get much of the Senate's free pass to any ASI sponsored event gives a general indication of why those Poly students are involved in campus politics.

This privileges that the Senator are so generously giving themselves, has the capability of snatching the ASI in excess of $3,500 per quarter or $3,500 for the school year. Not only will a senator be able to go to any ASI sponsored concerts, balls, or athletic events for free but he or she may also bring a guest, whose ticket will be paid out of ASI funds. The Senator will also not have to wait in regular lines or events but just breeze through the press or unmanned door.

For those of you who waited all day in line to get a good seat at the Eddie Money concert, you can better replace the advantage of the privilege.

All committees will be adversely affected by the Senator's "free pass" resolution. For example, the Concert Committee, whose members receive concert tickets in lieu of their work, will lose this work incentive if the senators have their way.

The senators rationale for the passage of the "free pass" resolution is that they deserve some type of compensation for all the work that they do. The problem here is that the compensation for what the senators have thought of is that it sets up the Senators as privileges elite, one step above all other students, a special club for which only senators would become membership.

Not only will Poly students resent the senators "free pass" privilege but the senators resentment will also widen the gap of communication that already exists between themselves and their senators, a by-product of the "free pass" resolution, that the senators (they) don't want be pleased with.

I suggest that the Senators scrap their "free pass" resolution. In the act of doing a good job isn't enough for these student-politicians then they don't belong in a student service position. Leadership should not be treated as a privilege but rather a responsibility.

Personal politics

Are ALL student senators involved in campus politics to represent the views of Cal Poly students or are they in it for their own personal gain? The recently passed resolution that would give much of the Senate's free pass to any ASI sponsored event gives a general indication of why those Poly students are involved in campus politics.

This privileges that the Senator are so generously giving themselves, has the capability of snatching the ASI in excess of $3,500 per quarter or $3,500 for the school year. Racist cartoon

Your cartoon of May 11 portraying the stereotype of the dirty unshaven Mexican, holding his hand out for money, was a most blatant display of racial racism. Not only does it demonstrate the caricature's own ignorance, but it shames a lack of professionalism on the Mustang's behalf.

The cartoon went beyond the limits of editorial license and displayed sheer irresponsibility.

Indication of why these Poly students are involved in campus politics.

The answer is not to eliminate bilingual ballots but to find a better way to print them, It that is the case. Japanese should not be asked to give up either their heritage or right to vote because it may cost a few extra dollars. It is a good job isn't enough for these student-politicians then they don't belong in a student service position. Leadership should not be treated as a privilege but rather a responsibility.

Voting rites

Proposed legislation in the United States Senate to eliminate bilingual ballots is just another ugly example of the increasing "America, love it or leave it" attitude that is growing in this country.

But when Hayakawa introduced legislation which would strike the amendment to the Voting Rights Act requiring bilingual ballots in jurisdictions where five percent of the voting-age citizens are members of a language minority group.

Hayakawa said as he introduced his bill last week that "I firmly believe that all U.S. citizens, regardless of their heritage, need to learn to use English well enough to vote in the English-speaking country."

Hayakawa is asking those of Hispanic descent to forget their heritage and to ignore their ancestors. Those Americans living overseas would cry murder if they were asked to forget about the American Revolution and the rest of their heritage. It is a ludicrous to even think about asking Hispanics to disregard their history.

There are 28 million Hispanics in the United States, many of whom understand it is their right better than English is as an U.S. citizen. To vote. Nobody can tell away that right, although people are still trying.

Hayakawa argues that it is too expensive to print bilingual ballots. Does that mean civil rights is becoming too expensive? Money should not be a no object when it comes to constitutional rights.

The purpose of these bilingual ballots is to find a better and cheaper way to print them. If that is the case, Hispanics should not be asked to give up either their heritage or right to vote because it may cost a few extra dollars.

There was a time when America was considered a melting pot of different cultures. Now we are unwilling to tolerate those who are different. It will be very unfortunate if the Senate passes Hayakawa's proposed legislation. The Statue of Liberty states "Give me your poor, your tired, your huddled masses..." The ending should go changed to say...Just as long as they're 100 percent American.

Cal Poly rec club skates for charity

BY CINDY HUANG

By skating for hours in the rain one night in the Hayward parking lot, members of the California Park and Recreation Society (CPRS) were able to raise $175 for the American Red Cross.

A total of $350 was made in the event which was held in February. The other $175 was raised so the 15 students who participated could attend a statewide conference in San Diego in March. The conference was a workshop that met with professionals in the recreation field.

The CPRS is the only professional club split between two majors—recreation and natural resource management, according to former president Kris Jacobson.

The society is a statewide organization made up of professionals and students in recreation. Its purpose is to bring professionals in contact with the students, she said.

"The club is a good way for students to find out more about their potential careers," said Jacobson.

Another project of the club was a student workshop with 15 professionals speaking to over 100 students. At the workshop, attended "Students in Action." Professionals spoke on recreation/conservation fields, jobs, resumes and park systems.

This was the first time the club sponsored the event. Jacobson said it will be held again next year because it was so successful.

"It was like a whole learning experience for us," said Kelley Federico, club publicity officer. "The students learned a lot and the professionals got a chance to share their ideas."

There are 30 active students in the club. It is funded by the $16 annual dues each member pays. Member also receive a monthly magazine on parks and recreation and a regular job bulletin.

The bulletin and magazine are among the benefits of being in the club because they keep students updated on information in their major, said Federico.

"A big benefit is that you're able to meet professionals in the field who can help you get a job. Students are intermingling with professionals."

The club is now in its second year of organization. It meets every other Thursday at 11 a.m. in room 2-47 of the science building.

State campaign spending 'skyrockets'

SACRAMENTO (AP)—Campaign spending on California elections skyrocketed to a record $38.3 million last year, the state Fair Political Practices Commission reported Tuesday.

The increase was more than twice the rate of inflation, Chairman Thomas Houston said at a news conference.

The report showed that some legislators have surplus campaign funds totaling nearly $12 million, but others reported deficits totaling $1.4 million.

Two senators, Democratic John Ioannou of Castro Valley and Republican William Cowles of Ceres, reported surpluses of over $10,000 each.

Only four assemblmen had surpluses of over $500. Republican Richard Hayden of Huntington Beach, Republican Paul Prato of Malibu, Republican Paul Bannai of Garden and Democrat Wade Dodd of Chula Vista, Bannai was tops with $80,186.

There is now no legal limitation on what a politician can do with surplus campaign funds. There are bills pending in the Legislature to forbid using them for personal expenses.

Campaign spending in 1976 included the most expensive ballot proposition in California history—Proposition 3, the anti-smoking initiative, which was soundly defeated. Opponents spent $8.4 million, while proponents spent $70,000.

Houston said the November election marked the first time in recent history that the Democratic nominee spent more on the governor's race than the Republican. Democrat Edmund Brown Jr., spent $2.4 million, Republican Evelle Younger spent $3.2 million.

Brown also spent $1.3 million in the primary, raising his total for the year to $4.7 million, $1.3 million more than Younger.

From car repairs to yoga the resource center helps

BY RONNIE BURRNETT
body first page

There has been several changes with the Women's Resource Center in the past year. The location and some of the employees have changed. But the purpose is still the same.

Helping women with any kind of problems they might have comes in the form of a human services directory. The center refers women to where they can get whatever type of help they need.

"We are not a counseling service, but we listen," said Gail Borgstrom, president of the board of directors of the center.

The Women's Resource Center, which incorporated in 1974 by a group of women who had been attending a consciousness-taking group, decided in 1975 that San Luis Obispo was in need of a place that could coordinate services offered for women.

"We help them organize if their needs are not being met, and we offer them a meeting place," said Borgstrom.

Often their organizing takes the shape of a newsletter or a small group at the center.

"They range from automotive repair to CB groups and yoga," said the president. This year there have been five workshops so far for the different organizations.

"Implementing them can be a problem because they require a lot of time and energy," she said. "But I'm hoping to get it a whole bunch going."

The center has both a lending and a reference library of books about women's concerns.

While interest would appear high the center only has 10 or 15 active volunteers, she said.

Two months ago the volunteers, feeling completely exhausted, ran an ad in both the Telegram-Tribune and their newsletter asking volunteers if they were interested enough anymore.

Over 50 women turned out for a meeting but almost all backed out of the alliance. Vonora Center, Cal Poly, Rut operation went ahead neverthelous.

Five meetings are held the second Monday of every month. Each November the center sponsors "A Day with Creative Women," held in the Mission Playhouse. Women, mostly from all over the county participate in this art show and interpret the theme, which is "The Biggest Man of the Century for the Center."

One of the biggest problems the center is facing right now is just not having enough volunteers. The burden is if more people share it, she explained.

"The other problem the center needs to overcome is a radical image," she said.

"We are not feminine, it's here for all women," she said. The WRC has moved twice in the past year and is currently located at 3133 Higuera in part of the Dandelion Winery. Anyone interested in volunteering can call them at 564-6313.

Volunteers help battered women cope

BY RHONDA ROSARITH

Debra Carlson sees a side of San Luis Obispo that is contrary to its usual image. At times of the Women's Resource Center, Carlson spends a good part of her time helping local women who have been battered and bruised by their mates.

Volunteers at the Women's Resource Center and those working for the Women's Crisis House, both in San Luis Obispe, are dedicated to helping women find what they term "battered women'—work out their problems.

"The Women's Crisis House is kind of a last ditch thing," said Carlson, a volunteer at the Women's Resource Center. She said women must be over 18 years old and must have no other place to go, such as relatives' or friends' in order to be admitted to the house.

Volunteers for the Women's Crisis House can be reached only through hotline mental health departments in San Luis Obispe. Pan Robins and Arroyo Grande, and the Women's Resource Center. This is for the protection of the women who use the services.

"It is basically a temporary shelter," said a volunteer who would be identified by only her middle name. "The house is so small and if the funds are inadequate, they can take only two or three women at a time.

The volunteers for the Women's Crisis House take their work seriously and they have guidelines to follow when they receive a call.

"We have screens and an intake," said Jane. "Screeners are the ones who receive calls. "The screeners listen to women's stories, ask questions, and offer support."

"Screeners set up planning kinds of things," said Carol Painter, a psychologist and advocate for the organization. The screeners recommend simple kinds of programs for battered women to take such as having an extra set of keys and extra keys, birth certificates for the woman and any children needed to apply for welfare, a separate social security card sent from the husband if married, extra money to get away, emergency phone numbers and a planned escape route.

As an advocate, Carol and others make actual physical contact with these women if the volunteer determines they need further help.

"We really ask her to start making her own moves as soon as possible," said Carol. She added later, "Our primary purpose is just to provide a way out."

Carol says although battered women come from every economic class and even professional women are calling for help. "The tendency is for us to deal with women who don't have a great deal of money."

"We are running into the money," said Carol. Right now the Women's Crisis House, which incorporated about two years ago, is operating on $1,000, while a group of about 20 volunteers would like to get away from this type funding, saying this is a community problem.

While many women use the services of the Women's Crisis House, most of the women who come to them have been battered.

"We need to get the batterers to the batterers," said Carol. "We don't need to be advocates for battered women."

But she added, "The people who are doing the batterers are sick.

"There are 10 out of 10 they (the offenders) have something in their background that causes them to do it." Jane said. She said something about their childhood could be responsible for their personality.

Short circuit leads to campus power failure

A power outage caused by a short circuit in transmission lines on campus impacted some major inconvenience but no problems on Tuesday.

In the cafeteria and snack bars prices had to be written out by hand, since computer terminals and cash registers were out of operation, said Mike Voth, food operations manager at Cal Poly, Rut operation went ahead neverthelous.

"For the customers out front, about the only inconvenience are slow lines and coke machines not working," Voth said.

"We can see we have a power failure. We don't have any idea out there yelling and screaming."

No menu had to be changed, Voth said.

"In all the food services we opened on time," he said. "It takes more than a power failure to put us out of business."

However, cooking and other behind-the-scenes operations had to be done illuminated only by dorm emergency lights which were powered by an In-house generator, said Voth.

Electrical engineer Paul Gordon and Larry Wright worked from 3 to 6 a.m. to replace some fuses on an electric panel to restore the short circuit took place. The old fuses were out and new ones put in their place.

"I think these old fuses are original from when the line was first put in," said Voth. "We're Behaving, we're using the old fuses."

"We think they just died out." The splice where the short circuit occurred may be by 30 years old, Behaving said.
Poly health team combats the blues

BY JULIE MICHAEILS

Student diversity may be one of the most fascinating aspects of a college campus. As varied as people's goals, ideas and interests are, everyone experiences depression at one time or another.

"Depression is a normal part of life," said Lois Dirkes, student counselor at the Cal Poly Counseling Center.

She said depression may occur when individuals are not getting something they want, whether it is an expectation or a goal.

The two major components of depression are a sense of anger and feeling of loss, she added. Dirkes said people must learn how to cope with anger and loss in a positive way.

"You really don't learn how to deal with depression in this society," she said.

Especially at college, it is not acceptable to repress feelings of emotion, such as sadness, said Dirkes.

"People feel if they (repress) those feelings, no one will like them," she explained.

The only alternative depression, she said. Relying on drugs to feel depressed by taking prescribed mood- elevating drugs or alcohol.

"Depression occurs in people with close relationships," she added. "The closer someone is to you, the more likely it is to express themselves in terms of depression.

Dirkes said it is important that individuals are able to become aware of depression and deal with it constructively.

"We tend to hang on to things and not let go, even if we know we arekatually are," she said.

Dirkes said physical activity is an excellent way to alleviate depression. According to a self-help checklist provided by the Mental Health Team in the Health Center, jogging or pleasant activities help to block depression.

"When your mind is not occupied with something, you can't think about it," she said.

"People can kill themselves by not thinking about it," she added.

Dirkes said whether a person is feeling depressed or not, the physical activities can help.

"There are many times when a person is feeling depressed, but it is a normal thing to do," she said.

When students are especially disturbed, they may feel like they are depressed.

"Some people may get so totally depressed, they become incapacitated," she said.

"They may think in a different way," she added.

The Health Center, besides providing regular counseling, has facilities and medication available for extremely depressed students. However, she said it is better for students to seek help on campus so they can enjoy everyday activities.

Dirkes said most depression is at the level where it must simply be accepted and coped with. The Counseling Center offers lower groups ranging from stress control and other groups to learning how to deal with relationships.

'80 float theme chosen

Students at Cal Poly Pomona have chosen "Hard Rock" as the theme for their 32nd joint float entry in the Tournament of Roses Parade.

The winning float design was submitted by Sue O'Loughlin, a student at Cal Poly, Pomona. O'Loughlin, from Upland, also designed last year's award winning entry in the parade. Her design was chosen from entries submitted in the float design contest sponsored each year by the Rose Float Committees at the two Cal Poly campuses.

This year's float, in keeping with the 1980 parade theme, "Music in America," will feature a brass quintet and a saxophone player playing both instruments in super animation.

Traditionally, it is students from both universities the float is the only entry in the Rose Parade that is completely designed, constructed, and financed by students.

Wildlife treaty dropped

TOKYO (AP)-Six years after Japan signed a treaty protecting endangered wildlife, efforts to get the treaty ratified have hit another snag.

The Japanese Foreign Ministry says it has temporarily dropped plans to submit the measure-aimed at cutting down the flourishing trade here in rare and protected animals-to the Diet, Japan's parliament.

A spokesman said "it appears impossible to get it ratified" the reason because of opposition from animal traders, importers, furriers and other businesses, and because of the Diet's schedule.

According to the World Wildlife Fund more than 600 birds were illegally imported into Japan in the past five years, including more than three peregrine falcons, 63 golden eagles, and from two to 60 of various other species. Many others were brought in under false fund claims, because of lack of knowledge of the part of customs men.

Other trade banned under the convention includes that in alligators, crocodiles, and reindeer skins, turtle shells and ivory-about $30 million worth a year of ivory. Other figures were not available.

"Japan may be the largest trader in endangered species," said Dr. Shinjiro Ikeda, director of the World Wildlife Fund of Japan. "According to a survey in Bangkok, more than 50 Japanese trading houses are involved in the trade-furs, live animals including chimpanzees and alligators.

Ikeda said the Japanese government keeps no statistics on such trade, and requires in most cases only an export license from the selling country. However, much of the trade comes through countries that haven't signed the treaty so the export license is no help in controlling sale of endangered species.

Sixty-six countries have signed the convention, but only about 50 have ratified it. Japan is the only major developing nation that has not.

The Japanese Association of Zoological Parks and Aquaria has been pushing for ratification, although some of its members to be shown a license from the endangered animal's native country, not exporting country, before they may buy animals covered by the treaty. But, he said, "some of our members do not observe the rules." In addition, some 100 to 150 zoos and aquariums are not members.

Asakura, Ikeda and officials at the trade ministry agree that, even if the treaty is ratified, it will be very difficult to enforce. They pointed out that animal traders agents are not specialists and don't recognize endangered animals.

The trade ministry plans to publish color pictures of the nearly 70 species on the convention list but does not plan to educate traders. The government is considering what to do if violations of the convention should be detected. Ikeda said it will be done by a foreign exchange control law with maximum penalty of 3 years in jail and a fine of about $1,500.

"It's going to be a very, very big problem," Asakura said.

Charge/credit helps economy

NEW YORK (AP)-Those with good credit were out in force this past week, and Shopper's World magazine said they seem to be easier to find. They have played a major role-some would say the key role-in keeping the recession from getting worse.

At the beginning of the year, many economists thought a recession would have developed by now. A key reason was that consumer debt, already at record levels, was considered unlikely to keep expanding. But it has. And that has kept the economy growing faster than many economists expected, thereby at least postponing the recession.

Inflation, and fears it will continue, are playing a role in the expansion of consumer debt. Consumers are buying on credit, now on the theory that prices will be higher next month.

"They are turning their worthless paper money into durable assets," said Michael K. Evans of Chase Econometrics, one of the economists who had expected consumer spending to slow.

But another reason for the decline is that, despite higher interest rates charged to businesses, credit is not harder to get for consumers. Nor, in many cases, is it more expensive.

Much consumer borrowing is through credit cards, on which the interest rate has been 13 percent to 18 percent, mostly the higher figure. The prime rate charged to corporate borrowers has risen from 7-3/4 percent to 11-3/4 percent since the beginning of 1979, but consumers are paying the same rate they always were.

What is more, credit is easier to get now than a year ago. While the tight money policy helped to slow consumer spending, many banks allow consumers to automatically get loans by overdrawning their checking accounts.

Unfortunately, most economists see a continuing boom in the economy as a bad thing, arguing that it will eventually lead to a more serious recession.
Wright building shows unique angle of architecture

"Architects may come and architects may go and never change your point of view—TFF remember Frank Lloyd Wright."

BY HERVEY JOHNSTON

Frank Lloyd Wright emerged as a preeminent figure of 20th century American architecture by pursuing his own unique concepts and designs. His creations have included everything from private homes to public movements and one of them, a medical building, can be found wedged between a serene stream and a busy San Luis Obispo street.

The Kari Kundert medical building, located on the corner of Pacific and Santa Rosa streets in San Luis Obispo, is a Frank Lloyd Wright building.

Dr. Kari Kundert, an ophthalmologist, got Wright to design the building. He said he had always been interested in architecture and especially in Frank Lloyd Wright's architecture. He said he found Frank Lloyd Wright's architecture items from his days at the University of Wisconsin in Madison, where he became familiar with private homes designed by Wright.

When the time came to design his medical building, Kundert said he chose Wright not only because he had a "natural interest" in Wright's work, but also because of having seen what Wright had done "to unusual clients." Kundert said his building was on the banks of the Alisal Creek.

Kundert said he sent Wright a letter in which he asked Wright to take on the project and outline the design concepts he felt concerned in medical buildings. Kundert said Wright sent him a collection of the text of which read: "I will meet you at the" Tallahassee (Wright's Arizona home) on September 15th."

From this and subsequent meetings, said Kundert, came the design for his medical building. "The floor plan was based on a flow of studies of patients over a period of months to make the sick more efficient," said Kundert.

Charles Waddell accompanied Kundert on two of his visits to meet with Wright. Kundert of Swift Air Lines Inc. Waddell was then in partnership with Walter Woolard in the contracting firm of Waddell and Reichtel Inc., which did the construction for the building. Kundert said there was no question about Wright's "genius."

"Wright's idea was architecture for the sake of architecture," said Waddell.

Very recently, a faculty member in the School of Architecture, told his architectural history class Wright had a special feeling for natural materials which was characteristic "almost the life of his life." Besides material Wright has "a house of wood," said Swannen.

Wright was also an innovator in the use of reinforced concrete as a building material, said Swannen.

The floor plan was originally designed to be built out of material called unobtainium, a special material which "has no mortar at the joints and which can open a 30 feet window with no reinforcement," said Kundert. Kundert said the unobtainium was abandoned because of problems with the San Luis Obispo building codes. Red brick, which comprises the exterior and interior walls, was substituted. The interior design of the building remained the same, said Kundert.

Allegations tie Curb to illegal record dealings

SACRAMENTO (AP)—The Sacramento Bee said Tuesday the Internal Revenue Service had requested an investigation because hundreds of MGM records were sold illegally to organized crime figures while Lt. Gov. Mike Curb headed MGM's record division.

A spokesman for Curb said the accounts were "absolutely ridiculous."

The Bee quoted unnamed sources, who said the alleged sales to four organized crime figures, as disclosed by records of fines and penalties for various forms of record sales, are at least $1 million. The source's sources claim the profits may have totaled more than $1 million.

Curb, who was president of MGM Records from 1970 to 1971, said the Bee was covering "old news" in a report about the professional football player whose brother is married to Curb's sister, who were directly involved in the arrangement. The source did not say whether Curb sold records to someone who is not a fan of the professional football player whose brother is married to Curb's sister, who were directly involved in the arrangement.

California gets new gas plan...

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Gov. Brown signed a federal order Thursday requiring most California service stations to stay open either Saturdays or Sundays, depending on whether their state business license number is odd or even.

"This will be a real change," said one South Pasadena Chevron dealer who declined to be identified. Lines were up to a block long again in San Francisco, though the average was about half a block, and across the bay in Oakland, some lines were 20 cars and 40 cars long.

It was an additional evidence of what Brown had said before: "Our hearts are to the people." Brown stressed that the law would take effect in 30 days, allowing the state to help cooperate assistance to work.

The Democratic governor, who flies to Washington this afternoon to argue the legal case for more gasoline per person with President Carter, said: "California wants more than it is entitled to, nor the federal government to enforce it either.

Brown said the state is probably using less gas than it would be expected in relation to the number of new jobs created each year.

"There is a limit on the gasoline allocation to the state, there would be a budget for people who need gas on the weekend, they must stay open until that one-station is closed.

While this will spread out the demand for gas so that there is no need to go to one station and the flexibility of the odd-even system is still maintained, Brown said.

Gasoline lines in California appeared to be normal Tuesday as the first day most cars with odd-numbered license plates had to be gas until Friday under a weekend odd-even rationing plan.

The plan requires gasoline stations with an even number of days' supply of gasoline to stay open only on odd-numbered Sunday, but they must stay open in order to meet their obligations to the public.

Brown said the odd stations would have for staying closed all weekend will be if a gas delivery failed to arrive, religious holidays, or if they had been closed for reasons.

Rationing stations also are required to mail their hours and days of service to the public and available to the public.

The governor signed the order and addressed reporters before speaking to the Los Angeles County Department's 10th annual memorial service for fallen law enforcement officers in the city of duty.

Brown signed an order granting by Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley, Police Chief William C. Parker, and Supervisor Peter J. Pinehose and Cooperation Department.

Brown stressed that the law would be a real change, and the people would have a plan that can work.

The California Highway Patrol may do more mixing and waiting in order to change the plan with gasoline:

CHP Commissioner Glen Craig said he told field commanders to open up all fuel stations that are needed and the number of new jobs created each year.

"Some reduction in routine patrol can be expected, but it shouldn't affect our ability to help people," Craig said in a statement.

"The state will do more traffic observation from in order to save gasoline:

While feds re-examine prices

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Federal officials are planning to meet with oil industry officials and representatives of the Public Utilities Commission to meet with oil industry officials and representatives of the Public Utilities Commission to discuss the price of gasoline.

"We also will consider whether dealers should be required to post at their stations certain data on costs and prices for consumers to determine whether they are being overcharged," the department said.

The agency said the inquiry was undertaken in response to complaints from retail dealers' associations across the country, and in recognition of significant changes in the market conditions surrounding gasoline.

"The dealers say the current regulations do not allow them to furnish to price information to customers who ask for the price of gasoline, which has been increasing," the department said.

Craig said he was not surprised that a large number of stations would be open.

"I think it will take the combined effort of Republicans and Democrats," Craig said.

"It would be difficult for police and state government to enforce it, but I think we have a plan that can work.

Jones cult death list possible

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional investigators Tuesday said they would not rule out the possibility that a Peoples Temple death squad was tracking the nation's leaders, seeking to carry out the last wishes of the Rev. Jim Jones.

The investigation, reported to House Foreign Affairs Committee after a six-month probe into the murder of Rep. Leo J. Ryan in Guyane, said the possibility that cultists had a "death list" marking national leaders for assassination "should not be totally discounted."

"There is evidence to suggest Jones and some of his key lieutenants discussed and had "understandings" to eliminate various individuals, including national political leaders," the staff report concluded.

Ryan, a journalist and a cult defender was shot to death as he entered the People's Temple compound in Guyane last Nov. 18 while attempting to investigate reports that Jones, the cult leader, was holding people against their will. While Ryan, and his party were under attack, Jones led more than 900 cult members in a ritual murder-suicide by cyanide poisoning.

The investigators told the committee there is circumstantial evidence that Jones made advance plans with his lieutenants to assassinate Ryan if the congressman could not be debriefed on true conditions at the settlement.

"Providing some moderate credence to the idea of a contingency plan is the fact that the Peoples Temple suicide ritual started before the Port Kaltuma airstrip was secured, and the French daily, l.e Monde, that day.

Iranian newspapers fight back

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Iranian newspapers, still asserting their independence three months after the Islamic revolution, are embroiled in a struggle with ruling forces that could determine the fate of freedom of the press in the country for years to come.

The debate originally pitted Jomeini and its religious allies against sharp street demonstrators, attempting to curtail the news media's freedom. Now, with the atmosphere of confrontation billowing, the conflict is being played out against a backdrop of the new, moderate-minded Islamic government.

Last Saturday, after Jomeini criticized its use of an article about Sauromatian relations, based on an interview he gave to the French daily, Le Monde, Ayandegan's headline highlighted a statement attributed to Jomeini that leftists had nothing to do with the new Islamic government. Without being specific, Ayandegan's headline said, "The newspaper had been "depraved" since the start of the revolution.

The newspaper printed three blank pages in the Saturday edition as a protest against censorship and said it would not publish again until the government clarifies its policy on press freedom.

Fewer than 1000 of the 244,119 registered voters' signatures they needed to qualify a measure by May 4 to order city staff not to routinely send city documents to the CTRPA except those reviewed under the Freedom of Information Act.

In the traditional opening address, the queen read a speech prepared by ministers in speech of the new Tory government.

"Before concluding her speech, the queen said the Tories will make "every effort" to improve the security of the nation and to strengthen our contribution to the North Atlantic Alliance on which our defense is based.

They the government will maintain the effectiveness of Britain's nuclear deterrent. At the same time they will work for greater stability in East-West relations.

Poly students signed to NFL pacts

Three Cal Poly football players have chances of adding to the growing list of Mustang players in the NFL. When the NFL draft was held two weeks ago, not a single Cal Poly player was picked. Since then, however, Eddie McDonald, Steve Spencer and Mike Raymo have signed as free agents with NFL teams.

Ed McDonald
McDonald is a 6'0", 240 lb. defensive tackle from Santa Maria. He signed a contract with the Denver Broncos. McDonald came to Poly after playing two years at Allan Hancock JC.

Steve Spencer
Spencer, signed by the New York Giants, was a two-year starter for Poly at middle and outside linebacker while at Poly, assistant coach Clee Spencer, at 6'4" and 245 lb., has the size to play pro ball according to the coaches.

Mike Raymo
Raymo, a three-year regular at linebacker for the Mustangs, was signed by the Oakland Raiders. Raymo played both middle and outside linebacker while at Poly, starting at both positions. Last season, Raymo was a captain for the Mustangs and the Mustangs senior is only the third player to hold the honor for more than one season while Jim Harper has been head coach of the team.

"Mike does a lot of things by example. He's a leader in every sense of the word," said Coach Bobbie Lanehart. "He is an extremely versatile player. He's intense, and good all-around, and plays equally well against the pass or run."

Although all three players have been signed by pro teams, they will have to make team cuts. Competition will be stiff, as the players will compete for positions against draft picks, other free agents, and veteran players. Should the players make the squad, they will join four other ex-Mustangs currently playing for NFL teams. Gary Davis is a running back with the Miami Dolphins. Tight end Dana Nafslgor plays for Tampa Bay. Jimmy Childs, drafted last year by St. Louis, played wide receiver for the Cardinals until being injured. Andre Kayes plays for the Philadelphia Eagles, but was injured before the season started.

Trade one tough summer for two great years.

Mustangs fall in regionals

This year for the Mustang softballers, ten out of 18 losses came by one run. Finishing enough, two stifflingers eliminated them from the regional playoffs last week at Chapman.

In a game Mustang coach Judy Harris described as "We never should have lost," the Mustangs faced a tough U.C. Berkeley team Thursday and both squads came out fighting. After a two-run first inning by the Bears, Harris watched her team tally four times in the bottom of the first to take a 4-2 lead.

With two out and one on, Rene Porteur walked and Myrna Martin followed with a single. Lori Pard created a seven-loaded double to score two runs. Sue Beagin and Khelia Langrock then tapered singles to pad the score two more runs.

But a costly error in the next inning proved fatal to the Mustangs. With two outs and one base loaded, the Mustangs tried for a double steal at second. Rene Porteur and the only run came on a long sacrifice fly. The Mustangs went 4-2, but Fresno came back to win. In the seventh, the score was locked at four as an error lost the game in the Berkley game. Bear starter by the Fresno second baseman which scored Yochi for the Mustangs 5-4 victory.

Too good Cal Poly Pomona, also in the consolation bracket due to an outstanding defense, was next on the Mustangs slate. Twice this year Pomona had blanked the Mustangs, 4-0. Timmy Childs hit the plate, and the only run came on a long sacrifice fly. They went 0-2 in the consolation bracket.

Although Pomona has one of the best teams in the country, and went 0-23 in the championship series, Pomona will be a formidable opponent for the Mustangs. Pomona, along with U.C.L.A. and Chapman, will travel to Nebraska for the finals.

Harris cited Lori Parral as having an outstanding defensive performance for the Mustangs.

The catcher played through injuries and kept the Mustangs in the game. Harris gave credit for this to the Mustangs home plate, where Pomona only won one of the four games.

Poly nine scrap for winning season

BY JOHN KELLER
Daily Sports Editor

A season-ending offensive blowout by the Mustang bas ball team marked the end of the UC Riverside
Highlanders.

The explosive Saturday doubleheader (11-1 and 12-3) brought the nine season to a close. The teammates combing the games outscored the competing Highlanders. 1 Riverside's first weekend with the Highlanders.

The Mustangs won the first game, 11-1, as Carmen Mehl
pitched a complete game, allowing eight hits and three walks to the cornering 9-21-
strikeout duo.

The winning run came early in the second inning, as a B.J. Mayer triple set up a Sacrifice Fly.

The second game was more of the same, as the Mustangs piled up runs on the Riverside defensive mistake. The pitchers allowed 10 hits in seven innings, but never lost the lead.

AVOIDING THE TAG—Sophomore Craig Gerber slides away from UC Riverside's catcher in order to avoid being tagged out. Gerber was out, but the Mustangs swept the doubleheader Saturday, 11-1 and 12-3.

SOFTBALLERS FIIISH
For this year, the Mustangs will just try to have a winning team and barring the above, all will be well. Harris is scouting for replacements.

"I can't say who they are yet, but we haven't finalised the contract, but they are all top-notch players," said Harris.
