Summer Mustang

Thursday, Aug 20, 1981 California Polytechnic State University, San Luis Obispo Volume 45, No. 123

Speaker: Bible "contradictory"

BY RUSSELL BUZZELLI

The refurbished and reopening of the west facility at the California Men's Colony may be postponed for six months to one year, due to continuing litigation and the filing of a court-ordered Environmental Impact Report on the expansion's potential effects.

San Luis Obispo City Council filed suit against the Department of Corrections last Friday morning, citing the temporary restraining order halting any further expansion.

The injunction sought only to halt the draining for water for the new facilities, but the court in reaching its decision made it clear to the Department of Corrections not to do any further refurbishing work.

"The city needs to communicate better with local communities on issues such as this," said County Supervisor Jeff Jorgensen.

Jorgensen explained that officials in the California Department of Corrections apologised for the lack of community interaction with respect to the expansion but went ahead with its plans anyway.

"It is aware that overcrowded prisons are an issue that need to be dealt with," said Jorgensen, "but new institutions need to be built in the areas where crimes are committed.

Jorgensen said that he did not see prison violence as a major problem as a result of the overcrowded situation existing at the CMC but did add that "overflowing does lead to a great amount of violence in my prisons."

According to her press secretary, Assemblywoman Carol Hallett, "wants a commitment from Gov. Jerry Brown that these expansion facilities will only be temporary until more prisons can be built.

Hallett's press secretary, Robin Reid, informed Sum­mer Mustang that there are currently two prison bills before the state assembly which seek additional funds from the taxpayer for the construction of new penal institutions.

San Luis Obispo County is doing more than its share in housing offenders for the state of California," said State Senator Henry Malo.

Mens Colony expansion brings criticism from city

BY RUSSELL BUZZELLI

The corrupt, contradictory history of Christianity was the topic of a lecture Tuesday night in Arroyo Grande, in a religion series sponsored by lecturer Mark Roland.

Roland has also spoken outside of campus about the history of the Christian Church at a lecture in Arroyo Grande Tuesday evening. Roland said no Christians have accepted his offer to debate.

"The state needs to communicate better with local communities on issues such as this," said County Supervisor Jeff Jorgensen.

Jorgensen explained that officials in the California Department of Corrections apologised for the lack of community interaction with respect to the expansion but went ahead with its plans anyway.

"It is aware that overcrowded prisons are an issue that need to be dealt with," said Jorgensen, "but new institutions need to be built in the areas where crimes are committed.

Jorgensen said that he did not see prison violence as a major problem as a result of the overcrowded situation existing at the CMC but did add that "overflowing does lead to a great amount of violence in my prisons."

According to her press secretary, Assemblywoman Carol Hallett, "wants a commitment from Gov. Jerry Brown that these expansion facilities will only be temporary until more prisons can be built.

Hallett's press secretary, Robin Reid, informed Sum­mer Mustang that there are currently two prison bills before the state assembly which seek additional funds from the taxpayer for the construction of new penal institutions.

San Luis Obispo County is doing more than its share in housing offenders for the state of California," said State Senator Henry Malo.

By Debra Kaye

The corrupt, contradictory history of Christianity was the topic of a lecture Tuesday night in Arroyo Grande, in a religion series sponsored by lecturer Mark Roland.

Roland has also spoken outside of campus about the history of the Christian Church at a lecture in Arroyo Grande Tuesday evening. Roland said no Christians have accepted his offer to debate.

"The state needs to communicate better with local communities on issues such as this," said County Supervisor Jeff Jorgensen.

Jorgensen explained that officials in the California Department of Corrections apologised for the lack of community interaction with respect to the expansion but went ahead with its plans anyway.

"It is aware that overcrowded prisons are an issue that need to be dealt with," said Jorgensen, "but new institutions need to be built in the areas where crimes are committed.

Jorgensen said that he did not see prison violence as a major problem as a result of the overcrowded situation existing at the CMC but did add that "overflowing does lead to a great amount of violence in my prisons."

According to her press secretary, Assemblywoman Carol Hallett, "wants a commitment from Gov. Jerry Brown that these expansion facilities will only be temporary until more prisons can be built.

Hallett's press secretary, Robin Reid, informed Sum­mer Mustang that there are currently two prison bills before the state assembly which seek additional funds from the taxpayer for the construction of new penal institutions.

San Luis Obispo County is doing more than its share in housing offenders for the state of California," said State Senator Henry Malo.

Cal Poly vocalist enthralls county fair audience

By Mike Carroll

As Cal Poly student Carol Jean Cox demor­strated her vocal talents last week at the San Luis Obispo County Mid-State Fair, her goal was to leave the audience "a little hap­pier than when they came in."

And that she did.

Guitar in hand, Cox per­formed a series of original and popular songs to a forgotten group of people, a crowd of people.

To make a long story short, a large group of people were singing and clapping and doing just about anything they could do to support Cox, her music and the performance of "Me and Bobby McGee."

"It is a short step from declaring themselves infallible to using force he said. Believing that there was the only true religion led to the long brutal history of anti-Semitism, he said. Although "Hitler was a logical result of Christianity," he was not the first to persecute the Jewish, he said.

Even his method of forcing Jews to wear a star to identify themselves was not new. Roland said. Hitler got it from Pope Paul IV who asked his Jews in Rome to wear yellow stars in 1555.

"The central themes in her songs involve "reflecting on my life," which include her family and Christian values," she said.

Cox, a liberal studies ma­jor, said she uses her music to financially support herself. She said that without her musical abil­ity, she would not be attend­ing Cal Poly.

Cox has performed in several local nightclubs, but does not see this as a conflict with her Christian values. The "Christian sector needs to get out to the public more," she said. Although she plays in bars, that's just "revolving around alcohol," Cox said.

"I try to help people who needs help," she said.

"I know my words are empty and inef­fectual," she said. The purpose of his lectures and propos­ed debate, he said, is only to express the truth and have a different viewpoints ex­pressed, to stimulate more original thinking and "let the chips fall where they may."

In reviewing nearly 2000 years of history, Roland pointed out the main char­acteristics he considered common to all branches of Christianity. The reason for so many divisions, he said, is because the Bible is confusing and con­tradictory, and men have misunderstood it or interpreted it differ­ently from the beginning.

These men split from the church to form new ones, because of issues such as the Trinity; should man worship the Father (God) only, or the Father and Son and Holy Spirit? This resulted in the schism that produced the Catholic and Eastern Orthodox churches, he said. The primary division however, is between those who worship in an emo­tionally manner rather than an intellec­tual manner, he said.

Christiandom became corrupt through its worship of words but not action, its doctrine of infallibility and its justification of force, Roland said. He agreed with many ideas in Christianity, but said Christians do not practice what they preach and only preach in a vague way what the members want to hear, he said, making their theology only empty words.

The doctrine of infallibility began 100 years after Christ's death, when a church leader declared that ministers could fulfill sin, which was without Biblical basis, he said. This gave religious leaders a "vague and mysterious reverence" from congrega­tions thereafter.

The doctrine was further strengthen­ed in 1870, when the Pope claimed his doctrines were infallible. This created the belief among church members that if they followed his teaching then they would be infallible too, Roland said.

As Cal Poly student Carol Jean Cox demonstrated her vocal talents last week at the San Luis Obispo County Mid-State Fair, her goal was to leave the audience "a little hap­pier than when they came in."

And that she did.

Guitar in hand, Cox per­formed a series of original and popular songs to a forgotten group of people, a crowd of people.

To make a long story short, a large group of people were singing and clapping and doing just about anything they could do to support Cox, her music and the performance of "Me and Bobby McGee."

"It is a short step from declaración themselves infallible to using force he said. Believing that there was the only true religion led to the long brutal history of anti-Semitism, he said. Although "Hitler was a logical result of Christianity," he was not the first to persecute the Jewish, he said.

Even his method of forcing Jews to wear a star to identify themselves was not new. Roland said. Hitler got it from Pope Paul IV who asked his Jews in Rome to wear yellow stars in 1555.

"The central themes in her songs involve "reflecting on my life," which include her family and Christian values," she said.

Cox, a liberal studies ma­jor, said she uses her music to financially support herself. She said that without her musical abil­ity, she would not be attend­ing Cal Poly.

Cox has performed in several local nightclubs, but does not see this as a conflict with her Christian values. The "Christian sector needs to get out to the public more," she said. Although she plays in bars, that's just "revolving around alcohol," Cox said.

"I try to help people who needs help," she said.

"I know my words are empty and inef­fectual," she said. The purpose of his lectures and propos­ed debate, he said, is only to express the truth and have a different viewpoints ex­pressed, to stimulate more original thinking and "let the chips fall where they may."

In reviewing nearly 2000 years of history, Roland pointed out the main char­acteristics he considered common to all branches of Christianity. The reason for so many divisions, he said, is because the Bible is confusing and con­tradictory, and men have misunderstood it or interpreted it differ­ently from the beginning.

These men split from the church to form new ones, because of issues such as the Trinity; should man worship the Father (God) only, or the Father and Son and Holy Spirit? This resulted in the schism that produced the Catholic and Eastern Orthodox churches, he said. The primary division however, is between those who worship in an emo­tionally manner rather than an intellec­tual manner, he said.
Grades are the curse of our academic experience. Achievement is based on an external product of a symbol that does not adequately portray knowledge learned or utility derived from course material. Grading is an administrative convenience tied together with some sort of criteria. An institutional curriculum should be intrinsically controlled rather than externally capped rewards and punishments. Grades reinforce behavior not necessarily related to the major aim of learning. The goal becomes the grade which is attained in ways that are destructive to the individual. Worthless problem sets would not be handed out because certain minimum requirements would be fulfilled by the students.

Another factor which favors the grading system is that it is a very easy means of ranking students for job or educational opportunities. It is one of the least often an accurate predictor to indicate expertise. Grades are result-oriented and do not indicate the motivation involved. By focusing on an end product, the whole instructional process becomes the goals is ignored. Yet this process is an important criteria for taxpayers to determine the probable success of a candidate.

To the extent results are relevant to a selection process, grades alone are not an effective means of assessing a candidate's success since that can be achieved through means other than those intended. Good grades can be attained by stealing tests, cheating and even those of other student's work. Another major default in this area is that there is no universal system of grading. A student who accomplishes the same amount in one class may get a lower grade doing the same work in another teacher.

A more qualitative assessment would involve evaluation of student progress at certain intervals during the course development. The achievement, initiative and talent could be focused on courses instead of grades. Thus the evaluations would serve as more descriptive means for determining the student's qualifications.

The last argument in favor of grades is that it provides feedback to students. Grades are an ineffective approach since they do not provide concrete ideas for constructive criticism. Grading is a clumsy, general and not very useful means of providing feedback. The process focuses on the end product rather than the phases on the solutions for the problems or difficulties that arise with effective production. The grade of the class is an indication to the student what the instructor sees is wrong with a course material is handled.

A much more effective learning situation could be created if individual evaluations were conducted throughout the course. If a student proceeds at a slower pace, the reward would be in reaching individual goals. Worthless problem sets would not be handed out because certain minimum requirements would be fulfilled by the students.

Another factor which favors the grading system is that it is a very easy means of ranking students for job or educational opportunities. It is one of the least often an accurate predictor to indicate expertise. Grades are result-oriented and do not indicate the motivation involved. By focusing on an end product, the whole instructional process becomes the goals is ignored. Yet this process is an important criteria for taxpayers to determine the probable success of a candidate. To the extent results are relevant to a selection process, grades alone are not an effective means of assessing a candidate's success since that can be achieved through means other than those intended.

Abolishing the grading system for a more accurate way of evaluating student achievement is necessary to reach the goals of creating an educational system. Emphasis should be placed on learning essential information rather than striving to attain a letter grade. Individually tailored instructional plans would assist students and teachers in developing the motivation and skills to reach goals. The shift from grade-centered to achievement-oriented instruction will increase the feelings of self-fulfillment and the recognition of success that is fundamental to the education process.

Author Kiki Herbst is a journalism major and Summer Mustang staff writer.

Letters

"Flack" not the issue

Editor: The article in the Thursday, July 30 paper has caused some misunderstanding. I was not properly quoted. I never said that my view had drawn "flack" from campus fundamentalists. No group has ever given me any "flack." In fact, I have the most cordial relations with students of all religious and intellectual persuasions. Although a very few individuals in the past objected to my inclusion of courses as reading William Blake, studying Eastern religions, or reading Apocalyptica, these disagreements were most always very friendly. Although I do not think that a professor should be compelled to conceal his or her own ideological views, I seldom reveal mine. My religious studies, exercises and honors all religions on an equal basis.

D. Saltzman, P.D.
Associate Professor Philosophy

Don't exclude Cuba

In the foulest tradition of Yankee chauvinists, the Reagan administration has managed to block Cuban participations in the global summit between the rich and poor nations, to be held in October on Mexico's Cozumel Island. Like a petulant child, the United States threatened to pick up its marbles and go home if the Cubans were allowed to play.

The absence of Cuba at a summit concerned with the troubles of the Third World might seem peculiar to some, as Cuba is the leader of the 113-member movement of Non-aligned Nations. Yet the absence of the United States would render the talks absolutely meaningless, as that country must be fundamentally involved in any global economic scheme. Therefore, Mexico's President Jose Lopez-Portillo was obliged to meet with Cuba's President Fidel Castro on Cozumel Aug. 7 and 8 and pledged with him to bow out gracefully so that the talks could proceed as planned.

Assuming such a role must have been an occasion of supreme embarrassment to the Mexican president. An urbanite with a keen historical perspective, he does not share Washington's hysterical fear of tiny Cuba. Yet Mexico is also a pragmatist on the world political stage and maintains good relations with both sides of the ideological coin. So the two presidents released a joint statement at the conclusion of their meeting, admitting that a boycott by the United States would "damage the negotiating process between the developed and the developing nations, a process that Fidel Castro has contributed so much to."

Castro expressed his gratitude to the Mexican president for the considerate diploamy, and announced that all Cuban allies would be free, as far as he was concerned, from any moral obligation they might feel to stay away from the talks.

Still, it was clear that relations between the two Caribbean neighbors had chilled. Castro was not happy at the sight of an ally doing the bidding for their mutual 格里立 neighbor to the north.

Cuba has suffered embarrassment and harassment from the United States for 20 years. Its main crime seems to have been launching an indigenous rebellion against an archaic dictatorship, then embarking on an ideological course that failed to recognize the United States as the center of the world. Add to all of this a overly refusal to be prepared by a 1961 American invasion, and we've got, in Uncle Sam's eyes, all the makings for an international pariah.

What the administration has done is win the battle, but shirk its chances to win the war. The summit will go on, and the Cubans, less than 100 miles from Cozumel, will stay home. But for the bulk of the poor nations in attendance, the turn of events will bolster Cuba's image as the David defying the Goliath to the north. Cuba will bask in the admiration of its sportman-like conduct in the face of Yankee bullying. Reagan officials may yet come to the conclusion that facing the Cubans across the negotiations table for a few days would not have been so unbearable after all.

Author Michael Winters is a journalism major and Summer Mustang staff writer.

Diablo is safe

Editor: Recent letters to the editor suggest a major debate. Does Diablo Safe is almost a certainty. Since some people relate to the name Diablo, it is safe to like to offer the following additional "horror possibilities" if something were to happen in one local service station was to explode at one time, several thousand homes and people would be wiped out instantly. If the explosion is strong enough and collides, falling on downtown San Luis Obispo or Cal Poly, thousands could be killed.

If a chlorine tank exploded on Highway 101 and Madonna Rd., lethal gas would blanket the town.

If the what's the point? You can "what if" just about anything and scare susceptible people.

We should all be concerned about safety of energy. What is being done is being asked with the "what if" instead of the "whatis."

Timely. Comments on student evaluation and yes, even accidents have demonstrated the extreme danger of the public is assured. That is what is.

We need Diablo. Diablo will operate safely.

Steve Marquis

Letters

Summer Mustang

In the foulest tradition of Yankee chauvinists, the Reagan administration has managed to block Cuban participations in the global summit between the rich and poor nations, to be held in October on Mexico's Cozumel Island. Like a petulant child, the United States threatened to pick up its marbles and go home if the Cubans were allowed to play. The absence of Cuba at a summit concerned with the troubles of the Third World might seem peculiar to some, as Cuba is the leader of the 113-member movement of Non-aligned Nations. Yet the absence of the United States would render the talks absolutely meaningless, as that country must be fundamentally involved in any global economic scheme. Therefore, Mexico's President José López-Portillo was obliged to meet with Cuba's President Fidel Castro on Cozumel Aug. 7 and 8 and pledged with him to bow out gracefully so that the talks could proceed as planned.

Assuming such a role must have been an occasion of supreme embarrassment to the Mexican president. An urbanite with a keen historical perspective, he does not share Washington's hysterical fear of tiny Cuba. Yet Mexico is also a pragmatist on the world political stage and maintains good relations with both sides of the ideological coin. So the two presidents released a joint statement at the conclusion of their meeting, admitting that a boycott by the United States would "damage the negotiating process between the developed and the developing nations, a process that Fidel Castro has contributed so much to."

Castro expressed his gratitude to the Mexican president for the considerate diplomatic, and announced that all Cuban allies would be free, as far as he was concerned, from any moral obligation they might feel to stay away from the talks.

Still, it was clear that relations between the two Caribbean neighbors had chilled. Castro was not happy at the sight of an ally doing the bidding for their mutual grudge neighbor to the north.

Cuba has suffered embarrassment and harassment from the United States for 20 years. Its main crime seems to have been launching an indigenous rebellion against an archaic dictatorship, then embarking on an ideological course that failed to recognize the United States as the center of the world. Add to all of this a overly refusal to be prepared by a 1961 American invasion, and we've got, in Uncle Sam's eyes, all the makings for an international pariah.

What the administration has done is win the battle, but shirk its chances to win the war. The summit will go on, and the Cubans, less than 100 miles from Cozumel, will stay home. But for the bulk of the poor nations in attendance, the turn of events will bolster Cuba's image as the David defying the Goliath to the north. Cuba will bask in the admiration of its sportman-like conduct in the face of Yankee bullying. Reagan officials may yet come to the conclusion that facing the Cubans across the negotiations table for a few days would not have been so unbearable after all.

Author Michael Winters is a journalism major and Summer Mustang staff writer.

Diablo is safe

Editor: Recent letters to the editor suggest a major debate. Diablo Safe is almost a certainty. Since some people relate to the name Diablo, it is safe to like to offer the following additional "horror possibilities" if something were to happen in one local service station was to explode at one time, several thousand homes and people would be wiped out instantly. If the explosion is strong enough and collides, falling on downtown San Luis Obispo or Cal Poly, thousands could be killed.

If a chlorine tank exploded on Highway 101 and Madonna Rd., lethal gas would blanket the town.

If the what's the point? You can "what if" just about anything and scare susceptible people.

We should all be concerned about safety of energy. What is being done is being asked with the "what if" instead of the "what is."

Timely. Comments on student evaluation and yes, even accidents have demonstrated the extreme danger of the public is assured. That is what is.

We need Diablo. Diablo will operate safely.

Steve Marquis
Emergency plan tested

BY MICHAEL WINTERS
Staff Writer

The hectic evacuation of Boy Scouts from Montaña de Oro Wednesday was no cause for alarm, but only part of a simulated emergency staged by the county and PG&E to test the workability of the emergency response plan for the Diablo Canyon nuclear power plant. A "full scale exercise" is how Tim Ness, acting as coordinator for San Luis Obispo County, characterized the event.

"We are in the process," said Ness, "of showing that this paper plan can work.

The "paper plan" was developed by PBC Worbes consultants of Palo Alto last fall to meet the needs of the county in case of an accident at the power plant. Aside from volunteer refugee Boy Scouts, Wednesday's exercise included treatment for mock radiation-plagued workers and tests of prearranged channels of communication between emergency agencies.

The exercise was jointly directed by the county and PG&E, with participation of the National Guard, the Department of Forestry, the California Highway Patrol, Caltrans and the California Office of Emergency Services.

Twenty-eight observers from the Federal Emergency Management Administration evaluated the exercise as it took place. Their comments will help determine whether any modifications need to be made in the emergency plan.

Mr. Ness noted that a favorable exercise is not necessary for Diablo to be granted a low power test license, which may be granted by the NRC within the week.

"The NRC has determined," said Ness, "that there would be no off-site consequences of a low power accident at the facility.

The exercise was described by Baxter as "an unrealistic chain of events that just couldn't happen in real life."

\[\text{Clearance!! ROSEHIPS 66% OFF RETAIL} \]

\[\text{AND MORE} \]

\[\text{THE CLOTHING BROKER} \]

\[\text{in THE CREAMERY SLO} \]
Entertainer and television personality Boxcar Willie kept a record county fair audience entertained last Thursday.

Religion debate

He has invited many people from the religious community to debate him, he said, but for reasons ranging from lack of knowledge to asking "what was in it for them," no one has yet accepted, he said.

KCPR STEREO 91.3FM

MIDNITE SHOW

Friday and Saturday
August 21, 22

NO NUKEs

Fremont Theatre
San Luis Obispo

Gold Margaritas
A Buck a Glass
Nightly

Dancing
Wed Thru Sat
from 9 to closing
Patio Open Friday
4p.m. to Dusk
Poly: no sanctuary from crime

BY JEANETTE MILLER

"An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Maybe, but according to Wayne Carmack, Poly's public safety investigator, a little prevention goes a long way in curbing campus crime.

"Students are apathetic here," said Carmack. "It's like living in Camodot, where crime never happens…they instinctually feel as if they live in a sanctuary, but that's simply not true."

Although Cal Poly does have a more "serious level of students, and not a high rate of criminally minded students," according to Carmack, there are problems with theft and burglary on campus.

The three biggest problems are stolen backpacks, car burglaries and theft in residence halls.

The backpacks are an easy target, as is evidenced by the myriad of colored locks on the dining hall and snack bar cubby holes, he said. There are also such slots in the book store.

"I have virtually seen students live out of their packs," said Carmack. "All of their books, books, books, money…it's amazing they are so careless with them."

The bookstores do have coin-operated slots for the book bags. These do not cost anything to operate, although you need a quarter to use them. The quarter is refunded when you return for your books.

There are finally book-Jockers placed in the dining hall and cafeterias," said Carmack.

But the problems of back packs is a fairly recent one at Cal Poly. The majority of the packs were taken in the last three weeks of spring quarter, but carried into the summer quarter as well.

Car burglaries rank second in campus crime. "Students are unaware of car theft," said Carmack. "They always think it is going to happen to someone else."

As a result, many students leave their cars unlocked. The result is stolen CIDs, stereo and even parking stickers.

"The type that hang from rear view mirrors, the transferable type (of parking sticker) is often missing," said Carmack.

Most of the cars that are broken into are those belonging to dorm students. Though campus police patrol the area very well, these students use their cars the least, and "are an easier target," said Carmack.

Residence halls also suffer from vandalism. "It's all too easy in the residence halls for someone to walk into an unlocked room and just take something," said Carmack. "A little prevention would cure this."

Many thefts in the dorms occur while others are in the showers. "Wallets and watches are just left in plain sight," said Carmack. "It only takes an extra ten seconds to lock something up, and it will keep the honest more honest."

All told, there are 336 misdemeanor reported for the 1979-80 Cal Poly school year. (This figure includes theft under $200, but not burglaries.) "We are really below average for crime," said Carmack, "especially when you compare us to someone like SDSU with 1,444."

But the crime-free campus myth continues.

"We try to work on the prevention of crime," said Carmack. But he finds the students of Poly are not "really responsive to what we are trying to accomplish."

---

Summer Mustang

Thursday, Aug 27, 1981

California Polytechnic State University, San Luis Obispo

VOLUME 45, NO. 124

Three disc jockies fired

The San Luis Sound hits a sour note

BY MICHAEL WINTERS

Staff Writer

This is the summer of discontent for Cal Poly Radio.

Charges of favoritism, tyrannical rule andิunderpayment have flown between executives and KCPR staff and have climaxed, in the last two weeks, in the purge of three of the most experienced station announcers.

"The Peter Principle is alive and well at Cal Poly radio," said Mike Kelly, who was fired last night. Kelly was the station's news director Bruce Byrd.

Byrd told him to leave and never return, after Kelly dedicated the song "Mr. Ed" to "all my power-hungry friends at the station."

"The Peter Harris and Rick Turner are the victims of a KCPR version of the Peter Principle," said Kelly. Their stay at the station ended with letters from general manager, Chris Norton, telling them that they would "never work at the station again."

The roots of the conflict, said Harris, lie in an history of inadequate management, a discriminating and favoritism to loyal, supervisory staff, at the expense of more competent, experienced workers.

KCPR maintains a format that virtually limits play to the Billboard Top 100 songs.

"There's not enough room for creativity and growth at KCPR," said D.J. Susan Radding, who is unhappy with what she feels is a rigid, unfair format. Radding said the station's music should reflect the tastes of all the staff, not exclusively those of the management and mention that she planned what is known as a suicide show, one designed to get the announcer fired.

"We had no one to run the place… I wasn't in favor of doing it丝毫down. We had too many fulfillment obligations."

Kushler, who also approached Radding because of the lack of staff, was removed by campus police if she did not leave.

"I came to the conclusion," said Hier, "this didn't have to happen anymore. She planned what is known as a suicide show, one designed to get the announcer fired."

"I walked into the station Saturday night (Aug. 16) knowing full well I would get kicked off," Hier said.

And Kushler arrived and threatened to have Hier removed by campus police if she did not leave.

Hier claims that she did not technically violate the format, but only played music unfamiliar to the staff. Hier is the program director who "loves'' the station and wants to keep the format, management and mention that she worked at another radio station.

Hier refused to say exactly what drew her wrath and caused Hier's dismissal in the episode.

---

Photography by Michael Ainscow

Three disc jockies fired

Mike Kelly

Rick Turner

Janet Hier

The San Luis Sound hits a sour note

"There are a lot of qualified people—Rick (Turner) is not the only one."

Kushler said her personal vendettas were purely imaginary. "There was never personal conflict," she said. "There are a lot of qualified

---

BY RICK TURNER

Staff Writer

It's all too easy in the residence halls for someone to walk into an unlocked room and just take something," said Carmack. "A little prevention would cure this."

Many thefts in the dorms occur while others are in the showers. "Wallets and watches are just left in plain sight," said Carmack. "It only takes an extra ten seconds to lock something up, and it will keep the honest more honest."

All told, there are 336 misdemeanor reported for the 1979-80 Cal Poly school year. (This figure includes theft under $200, but not burglaries.) "We are really below average for crime," said Carmack, "especially when you compare us to someone like SDSU with 1,444."

But the crime-free campus myth continues.

"We try to work on the prevention of crime," said Carmack. But he finds the students of Poly are not "really responsive to what we are trying to accomplish."

---
Opinion

A tribute

Thanks, Mr. Hayes

Sponsor Jim Hayes reminds us of a World War II hero, maybe he is the kind of character you'd find great in a fair. And say frankly, Hayes has his part at Cal Poly for the past eight months, but through the situation with a more positive attitude. He has enjoyed sharing his hobby for students, without the management and retain some personal integrity. My only regret is that I lowered my standards to their level instead of handling the situation with a more positive attitude.

From here, my friends and I will be working with people in the journalism department and other frustrated staff members this fall in an attempt to improve KCPR to a college radio station that fulfills its function as a public service to the students and residents of San Luis Obispo. If you have any ideas on how to improve KCPR, please direct them to Dr. Randall Murray, journalism department head, room 207 in the Graphic Arts building, Cal Poly. He is one of the few who can help us make KCPR what it is designed to be and not just a "power playground" for two or three students.

Take my wife, please,
Michael Lee Kelly

Special thanks to:

Deni Cates, Keith Chandler, Peggy Hyde, Lauri Kunz, Barry Lindholm, Erin Thomas, Allison Hanson, Dana Sorem, Diane Butch, Sue Caning, Susan Gates, Maura Thurman, Pam Wong, John Lodge, Michael Alnecow, Elizabeth Crookmy, Stan Kelly, Ron McMillon, Georganne Wales and everyone else at UGS.

Letters

KCPR: A 'power playground'

Editor:

I would like to apologize to the listeners of KCPR's "Comedy Show" for its final broadcast on Sunday, Aug. 23. I've enjoyed sharing my hobby for the past eight months, but through the situation with a more positive attitude. My only regret is that I lowered my standards to their level instead of handling the situation with a more positive attitude.

From here, my friends and I will be working with people in the journalism department and other frustrated staff members this fall in an attempt to improve KCPR to a college radio station that fulfills its function as a public service to the students and residents of San Luis Obispo. If you have any ideas on how to improve KCPR, please direct them to Dr. Randall Murray, journalism department head, room 207 in the Graphic Arts building, Cal Poly. He is one of the few who can help us make KCPR what it is designed to be and not just a "power playground" for two or three students.

Take my wife, please,
Michael Lee Kelly

Letters

Christian beliefs ‘defensible’

Editor:

I have also challenged dozens of Christians on campus. They are either too timid or too ignorant. Christian groups on campus use the facilities but do not promote or encourage dissident, free speech and respect of the First Amendment. These groups practice mind control of members. One major characteristic of mind control victims is resistance to debate and suppression of exposure. Their “faith” would be ir­reparably injured by reason and fair play. I will continue to advocate for debates, fair and public exposure of these issues on campus and elsewhere.

The fact that one man can call the bluff of Christians on campus is evidence that not only do these Christians have shallow faith but indecisive morals.

Mark Roland

P.S. Any Christian who wishes to sponsor a debate, or debate may make arrangements by calling 481-3004.

Letters

The final exams hurdle

Just as the word "final" elicits different responses from each of us as it also stretches the imaginations of instructors. Think of all the ways they have come up with for a final test. There is the fill-in, the multiple guess, the answer to a word problem, the short answer and the famed, but dreaded essay.

These are the hurdles which stand before you and a deserved summer vacation. They are your last chance effort to prove to the instructor that something of what he has said in the course of 10 weeks has actually gotten through to you. And you have exactly two hours to prove this to the administration which requires it.

But you are not alone in your plight. This next week of final exams, take note of the following:

— There is a shared sympathy on campus. Students become concentrated, bound together by looks of woe and nods of sad agreement.

— Coffee is consumed en masse. This helpful drug will many of you through the lengthen final week and view it from the early morning hours. No longer will "burning the midnight oil" mean cruising at 3 a.m.

— Your entire class will show up for the last meeting. Those you thought dropped out long ago, will re-appear, as if from the dead, for this momentous occasion.

— Friends formally found carrying friskies will have tripped in their flying discs for books.

Author Jeannette Van Berkel is a Summer Mustang staff writer and senior journalism major.

There will be no open desks in the UU quiet study room. Long lines of students will congregate around each copy machine on campus. Xerox will make big bucks this week as well as those of you selling your notes.

You will be exhausted and weary after this week of finals, but there is some consolation. While you are sitting at the beach, burning long needles in enormous bon fire, your instructors will be at home, grading, swearing over those bluebooks.

Editor:

The article by Debra Kaye, "Speaker: Bible 'Contradictory'" was based on her pages of notes taken at the speech itself, her long interview of me afterward, covering topics of belief. Her attentiveness and articles are commendable and superlative.

In the speech, as on Cal Poly campus, I have called for a debate with any Christian. The campus ministers expressed dark.

1. Wayne Peterson of Calvary Baptist did not return my call.
2. San Chilton of Baptist Student Union said he would ask his group. No further word.
3. Dr. Lasaanaks of Lutheran Church recommended a senior pastor, who recommended Dr. Lasaaneks.
4. Bishop Brady of Mormon did not return my call.
5. Rev. J.D. Hansen of Nazarene said, "I cannot prove you wrong, you can." But he declined, "I don't know if it would be beneficial to me."
6. Bruce Tjehan of Presbyterians said, "The Bible is full of errors," but it was the Word of God. He had lost "euthanasia” for a debate.
7. Deane Keller, minister to students who attend Grace Church, not only re­jected a debate proposal, but called police against me.

I have also challenged dozens of Christians on campus. They are either too timid or too ignorant. Christian groups on campus use the facilities but do not promote or encourage dissident, free speech and respect of the First Amendment. These groups practice mind control of members. One major characteristic of mind control victims is resistance to debate and suppression of exposure. Their “faith” would be irreparably injured by reason and fair play. I will continue to advocate for debates, fair and public exposure of these issues on campus and elsewhere.

The fact that one man can call the bluff of Christians on campus is evidence that not only do these Christians have shallow faith but indecisive morals.

Mark Roland

P.S. Any Christian who wishes to sponsor a debate, or debate may make arrangements by calling 481-3004.
Carmack remembers several occasions last year when he tried to set up crime prevention seminars in the residence halls. "There was little response—everyone still thinks that it (theft) happens to someone else, so why should they go to these seminars?"

Carmack and several counseling center workers are planning another program aimed at crime prevention. "Students aren't always aware that we (public safety) are even here—we want that information out...we want students to really know that we care about preventing theft," he said.

Several seminars and information meetings are scheduled for the Week of Welcome to hope that new students will be more responsive to preventing theft. "Maybe they'll lock up their rooms and take better note of their belongings," said Carmack.

Sales person, need help to market a new product used by ceramic artists? Help to get your company's name to the public? Your success, our growth! If you're interested in making $500 plus a month call 844-4128 after 9pm.

LYNDA'S TYPING SERVICE Reasonable rates—close to campus 541-1028 after 9pm.

Licensed home typing $25.00-$30.00 Transcription, composition, proofing, Students-Teachers FOR ALL YOUR TYPING NEEDS PLEASE CALL SUE 541-1015.

Housing Studio cottage in Santa Margarita New. 2373 Utilities 2 beds. $56.00 after 7 p.m.

For Sale-Spanish 2 bdrm near CR. Ideal for freshman. Owner will carry. Exclusive with Bearce Realty 543-3044 Or 543-3052

If you think "pads and rollers" are just a California craze, you're not ready for New Memorex.

Pads and rollers are key components of a cassette's tape transport system. This system guides the tape past your deck's tape head. It must do so with unwavering accuracy. And no cassette does it more accurately than today's new Memorexes.

The new Memorex tape transport system is precision-engineered to exacting tolerances. Flanged, seamless rollers guide the tape effortlessly and exactly. An oversize pad hug the tape to the tape head with critical pressure. So precise is the alignment, gentle enough to dramatically reduce wear.

Our unique ultra-low friction polyolefin rollers help prevent mangled hubs, disk damage and erratic tape验收 and randomly play after play. Even after 1,000 plays.

In fact, our new Memorexes can deliver true sound reproduction, or we'll replace it free. Of course, production that true and that enduring own a lot to do with the world's most sophisticated cassettes. But it's only a little to our unique new transport, free from the assembly line. But when you record on new Memorexes, it's like it's the first time.
Language and Cultural Studies

- Basic Conversational Spanish
- Chinese Language and Cultural Studies
- Chinese
- French
- German
- Italian
- Japanese
- Korean
- Language and Cultural Studies
- Portuguese
- Russian

accepting applications for all quarters for free preview and information:
Chinese Language and Cultural Studies
P.O. Box 13363, Long Beach, CA 90815
Telephone: (213) 597-3361

GRAND OPENING

The Round-up
Sandwich Shop

FREE DRINK
with purchase of any sandwich
Grand Opening Special
August 29th

Phone: 541-6684 1040 Bond St (cor. Higuera & Bond)

We Help You Buy or Sell

STUDENT & FACULTY

Mobile Homes!

- 30 day trial period from lease
- Same day approval
- 100% floorspace
- No money down
- Easy to maintain
- Move in today

Golden Coast Mobile Homes
1716 Monte Vista Ave, Montecito, CA
Telephone: 543-8402

Non-Violent Preparation/Trainings
for the Blockade/Encampment of Diablo Canyon

ALL PARTICIPANTS MUST HAVE NONVIOLENT TRAINING & BE IN AFFINITY GROUPS

For further information on the blockade please contact:
Abalone Alliance Diablo Project Office
432 Higuera Street • San Luis Obispo
Telephone • 543-6614 • 543-8402

Kinko's

Senior Project

Reports

Need a Typewriter?

Term Papers

Correspondence
talk to us about renting or buying an electric or manual

Nelson Office Equipment
690 Higuera
SLO
Hours: Mon-Fri: 8:30-5:30 Sat. 9-12

This Summer

Come, you families and workers and doctors and students and teachers and farmers and firemen and fireman folk and union people and ranchers and merchants and makers and keepers of small, medium, large, and very large businesses farm workers and dentists and business people and you young and mothers and handicapped and scientists and politicians and drivers and architects and clerks and brick layers and book drivers and artists and hairdressers
and waitresses and teachers and students and gardeners and cooks and civil servants and veterans and young and old and police
and truck drivers and architects and clerks and bus drivers and artists and waitresses and farm workers and lawyers and students and teachers and farmers and firemen and waitresses and book drivers and artists and dentists and farmers and fathers and
gardeners and cooks and civil servants and
dentists and farmers and
gardeners and cooks and
fathers and young and
gardeners and cooks and
fathers and young and
and teachers and farm workers and and carpenters and bankers and families and and families and workers and dentists and business people and you young
and mothers and handicapped and scientists and politicians
and drivers and architects and clerks and
brick layers and book drivers and artists and hairdressers
and waitresses and teachers and students and gardeners and cooks and civil servants and veterans and young and old and police
and truck drivers and architects and clerks
and bus drivers and artists and waitresses and farm workers and lawyers and
students and teachers and farmers and firemen
and waitresses and book drivers and artists and dentists and farmers and fathers and
gardeners and cooks and
civil servants and
dentists and farmers and
gardeners and cooks and
fathers and young and
gardeners and cooks and
fathers and young and
gardeners and cooks and
fathers and young and
gardeners and cooks and
fathers and young and