Poly wants to keep allocations
Energy fund change proposed

by Brian Bullock

If approved, a senior project design to convert the men's locker room shower to solar heat will be the working example Cal Poly needs to propose a change in the policy regarding state university energy funding.

In a report from the ASI Ad Hoc Committee is a proposal to change existing state policy to allow the universities to keep money allocated for energy costs.

Cam Bauer, Chairman of ASI Ad Hoc Committee, said the Student Senate would like to show state government that as a university Cal Poly can take on energy conservation projects and complete them for a much lower cost than present government procedures.

State policy now requires its universities to return any money saved by on-campus conservation projects to the state fund. If a university requires more money than it is allocated, it must take money from other sources in its budget.

Money is available from the state for conservation projects in the form of loans with the pay-back period being three years, said Bauer. He said that under this system there is no incentive for universities to further any conservation projects or develop any energy saving programs.

The ASI Ad Hoc Committee proposal would use the state energy funds and donations from private companies and individuals along with student labor force to complete conservation projects. The designs for the energy saving projects would come from senior projects just as the shower conversion did.

Three environmental engineering students designed the solar conversion for their senior projects with supervision from professors. Another contributor to the conservation projects would be the Solar Research Institute, a faculty derived board that would oversee any solar conversion projects.

Materials for future conservation projects would be sought by the Energy Conservation Committee, instructors and the ASI, in the form of donations.

The proposed shower conversion would put two solar collectors on the roof of the Physical Education Building to heat the men's showers. The collectors would extend 120 feet and save an estimated 34 percent in heating costs. The project has already received a donation of $60,000 worth of parabolic trough collectors from D.D. Feldman, a petroleum company in McKittrick, Calif., and more donations are expected.

Labor for these projects would come from technical classes, clubs, service organizations and fraternities. Using this type of labor would save the university and the state thousands of dollars in labor costs when compared to the current system, Bauer said.

This proposal, if passed, would make state universities more self-sufficient and more energy efficient and would also create a practical use for senior projects.

Before the proposal can be presented to the State Department of Finance, a working example of its effects is needed along with the approval of Vice President of Academic Affairs, Tomlinson Fort Jr.

Professors and Trustees hash out proposals

by Mary Hennessy

Grievance procedures, union rights and salary will be the key issues of the Academic Support Unit when collective bargaining negotiators meet this spring according to representative Christopher Hartley.

Hartley, a Cal Poly student selected to sit on the Academic Support Unit, said that both the United Professors of California and the Trustees of the CSU have announced their proposals and negotiations will start at the beginning of March.

"What either side asks for in writing is not necessarily what they want," he said. "Both sides leave room for negotiating acceptable solutions."

Hartley said the UPC is trying to eliminate unnecessary bureaucracy by proposing a condensation of the current state classifications. The union is also asking for higher salary ranges. However, the Trustees are offering a minimum and maximum salary scale, a maintenance of the current classifications, and no salary raise.

"The whole thing is so tricky," Hartley said. "The two sides can hash out a whole contract for months and then turn it over to the legislature to have them say, 'Sorry we can't do anything about this.'"

Hartley emphasized that the agreements the negotiators make are influenced by what they believe the legislators will accept.

"The legislature has to approve any financial costs," he said. "And right now the state has a billion and a half dollar deficit. The salary negotiations and others that have to do with finance are usually the last to be discussed so the bargainers can have a better idea of what the budget will look like."

Union rights versus management rights should also be an important issue at the bargaining tables, according to Hartley. The UPC wants to designate up to four people per campus as union officials and be able to conduct union business on university property. The Trustee counter proposal, however, calls for no union business on campus during worktime and only one union official per campus.

"Some of the provisions are really minor," Hartley added. "Like this bit in here (the contract proposals) about bulletin boards. But you can be sure that the UPC will get enough boards."

One of the main issues during discussions about grievance procedures will be the definition of the word grievant. The Union defines a grievant as "any employee in the union or the union itself."

"Grievance procedures are important because it is how employees protect themselves," Hartley said. "If employees are dissatisfied with working conditions, Grievance procedures help insure that the employee doesn't get swallowed in the system.""Hartley emphasized how closely the negotiators will examine each proposal.

Poly students to compete

by Kristen Simon

"Celebration" is the theme of the 1983 Miss City of San Luis Obispo Scholarship Pageant in which 14 contestants will compete for the title of Miss City of San Luis Obispo on March 12.

In a rehearsal for the media, the women walked through the evening gown competition, swimsuit competition and production number is the only time all the women perform together and with musical instruments and dances ballet tap and jazz.

Kerry Louise Franciscovich, a 21 year old working toward her teaching credential, sings and dances and has performed in several shows.

Suzanne Franciscovich is in her second year at Cal Poly studying physical education. Her goal is to improve the fitness level of corporate employees. She was first runner-up in the National Orange Show Pageant.

In the aftermath of the winter's fiercest storms, 49 town teams surveyed damage along the length of the California coast and their report was announced Wednesday by the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

"The most costly damage occurred along the southern coastline, with an estimated $22.4 million in dollarage in Los Angeles County, $14.4 million in Orange County and $10.7 million in San Diego County," said Alex R. Cunningham, director of the State Office of Emergency Services.

The report gave dollar damage estimates for each of the 22 California counties affected and specified the number of homes and businesses that were damaged.

Orange County had 987 homes affected by the storms, San Diego 662 and Marin 636. Los Angeles County was fourth at 353 homes damaged.

All the world's a stage for 'Hamlet' players

Dark-clad Hamlet strides onstage, foil in hand, bellowing to his father's ghost. The vast, sepulchral tones of the dead king's response reverberate through the blue-tinged night air.

Moments later, the house lights flicker on and — minus sound effects and dressed dapperly in a modern suit — the ghost himself, alias graduate English student V. Craig Heidenreich, strolls in from the wings to explain what's rotten in the state of Denmark. The bearded actor-turned-college-student should know: in addition to providing the sound and fury of the vengeful spirit, he is directing the Speech Communication Department's presentation of "Hamlet."

Tuesday afternoon's "teaser" supplied local high school English students a preview of several scenes before the three full-scale evening performances, beginning tonight. Each showing begins at 8 p.m. and tickets are available for $3.50 in the University Union ticket office.

Cal Poly greeks donate money for rape crisis

by Michael Weckler
Staff Writer

The San Luis Obispo County Rape Crisis Center received a donation of $1,000 from Cal Poly’s Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Council earlier this week.

The donation, raised during “Greek Week,” last May, will be “distributed among various functions,” said Pete Dunen, director of the County Rape Crisis Center.

Some of it will be used for food, clothing and shelter for victims. Dunen said, and some will probably go for a “child sexual abuse prevention program for use in the elementary schools throughout the county.

“Between 800 and 500 women and children a year receive some assistance from the center,” Dunen said, adding this week’s contribution equals about one-fifteenth of the center’s yearly budget.

The money for the contribution was raised last spring during “Greek Week,” said Lawney Falloon, president of the Interfraternity Council.

During this time, each fraternity and sorority puts together a skit. “This is the Greek Sing,” Falloon said.

The money raised during “Greek Sing” is donated to various charitable organizations.

Each year a number of organizations are nominated by the councils to receive money raised during “Greek Sing.” The Rape Crisis center was among those chosen again this year.

“They’re on the ballot but there are several being considered,” Falloon said, naming Hospices, the American Heart Association, and the Tri-County Blood Bank.

With or without a contribution next year/the Rape Crisis Center will benefit from the fraternity generosity in the form of an escort service for Cal Poly coeds.

The service is “under Ali’s name,” Falloon said, “but all sorority and fraternity members.

Escorts are available on campus only from 6 p.m. to midnight, Sunday through Thursday.

For an escort from the library, call extension 2029. The number from the University Union is extension 1409.

Hey, Dophy,

(Aug 17)
Beacons of lifestyles

When I was a child, and traveling across the country with my family, I would often meet men whose philosophies I still use as a yardstick for measuring "lifestyle." I met the first man at a gas station, while my father was purchasing gasoline for our long cross-country drive. This man’s height made him easy to spot in battle, thus a more evasive maneuver. He had been on the road for some time, after having raised a family on a farm and, "survived the government in twenty years." What that meant he never made clear.

What he did make clear was his profound belief that life was precious, and therefore must be lived as seen fit. He lived a simple life, his truck was his home, the cab his den, and the back of his truck a canvass-covered bedroom. He drove stories for pleasure, and worked leather goods for cash. These simple things, along with his retirement, seemed to do him quite well.

On one trip, he was finally fixed, and as we were pulling out of the station I told my father about the man I had just met. "It's just a damn bum," he said.

With that I sat back in my seat, staring at the back of my father’s neck, and for the hundredth time in my short lifetime I thought my father, like all adults, was truly mad.

The second man I met was my father’s friend, whom we had visited the same vacation. He was a fervent man, who seemed perpetually full of nervous energy. My father, who had served with him in the service, was proud of him, but had said of him: "He’s just a damn bum," he said.

Admittedly those feelings do not last. The fact I was a child and there comes a time to pursue other things. But having seen these two extremes I know their limits. As a youth I embraced the philosophy of the road, and now, as I approach the beginning of a career, the memory of my friend’s stance on a bus, shouting me the dangers of the extreme, and helping me to what to avoid.

Letters: Uniting concert

Editor:

Many people united to see and hear the Tierra concert Saturday night Feb. 5. In the Chumash Auditorium, and a great event took place. For the first time, Tierra, a well-known Chicano musical group from East L.A., came to share the true spirit and feelings of the Chicano people.

As the group played traditional and contemporary songs the audience responded quite positively and emotionally to a type of music not often heard around here.

Because a great number of people came to tell Tierra we recognize and support similar concerts.

We congratulate MECHA and ASI for their efforts in organizing the concert and uniting the people.

Thanks KCPR

Dear Editor:

We would like to thank KCPR for some very fine programming the night of Feb. 5. We usually are forced to tune in 103 F.M. the "Sunny Country" channel, to receive country music, so last Friday it was quite a surprise when KCPR played country. We hope that this will continue in the future and that the service be increased to more than one evening a week.
