Better carry a lucky charm around today, it's Friday the 13th.

Superstitions have been around for centuries and they continue to affect behavior. It is estimated that every Friday the 13th costs Americans $250 million in lost business. People stay home rather than go shopping or travel on this unique day.

The history of superstitions is often as interesting as the behavior of the superstitions. It was stated in an 800-year-old Saxon manuscript that, "Whoever be born on Friday or its night, shall be thinking evil in his heart, and shall be a thief and a great coward and shall not live longer than to mid-age."

In Hungary, if one's birthday fell on a Friday, the person was to cast off an article of clothing, rub drops of his blood on it and burn it. This would destroy the bad luck that would surely strike within twelve months.

Superstitions surround unededay

Chester, left, and Margaret disprove the superstition that black cats are bad luck—at least for each other. The pair has produced five kittens, of which four are创造出.

"much more" or "nothing."

The French refuse to use 13 as a house number. They go from 12 to 12½ to 14.

Americans are just as superstitious. Skyscrapers don't have a 13th floor and most airlines omit the seals of that number on their planes. Not all people are superstitious, but many are and won't admit it.

In 1960 a British teacher ran an experiment —setting up a ladder against a wall, over a narrow sidewalk by a busy street. Over 90 percent went around the ladder and risked walking into the street in order to pass.

It is commonly held that walking under a ladder is bad luck. At first thought, it seems quite logical not to pass underneath. The painter could spill paint or drop his brush on your head. Psychologists say this is rationalization.

The origin of this superstition goes back to pre-Christian belief in the sanctity of the trinity. A ladder forms a triangle; therefore, if it is passed through, the sacred power is defied.

Good luck charms are also a sign of superstition. Ten million rabbit's-feet charms and about four million four-leafed clovers are sold every year in the United States.

Many famous people are superstitious. Tony Curtis holds a wide variety of superstitions. He admits to a fear of white cats crossing his path and, strangely, the number 14.

Anthony Perkins believes that it is unlucky if one's shoelaces become undone, so he doesn't wear shoes with laces.

Whatever you may or may not believe in, re-member what day it is, and beware of Friday the 13th.

Changes have occurred rapidly for women over the past 10 years and they must learn to survive in a world that they are no longer dominated by.

In a speech sponsored by the Cardinal Key National Honor Sorority Thursday, Coleman outlined the last 10 years and they must learn to survive in a world that exists somewhere in between.

There are two extreme beliefs that exist in today's world: Things are fine for women and no change is necessary. The ceremonies were previously open to graduates to purchase as many tickets as they felt necessary. The entire thing (pamphlet) is full of inproperies, said former ASI Controller Charles Dickey. "It's a hypocrisy.

The ASI Student Senate voted Wednesday night to hold a new Communicative Arts and Humanities senatorial election Thursday May 19 after Senator Marcia Godwin contested the results of the general election.

Godwin is a senator to Interhall Council. She missed being elected to a second term by eight votes. Sue Robbons and Lars Fenske were elected during the general election May 4 and 5. Godwin's complaint was aimed at the editing of the voter pamphlet.

I am purely contesting it on the grounds of the editing of the candidates statements, said Godwin. "Communicative Arts and Humanities is not the only one that had problems." The pamphlet contains numerous discrepancies in the number of words per candidate statement. Candidates were told their statements were limited to 140 words. From communicative arts and humanities Lars Fenske's statement is 180 words and Greg Stellar is 200. All the statements, according to ASI Elections chair Don Erickson were cut. Half of them were too long, and many were illiterate," he said.

The new election was approved by a vote of 11-6.4 with both Godwin and Steller abstaining. Only members of the school of Comunicative Arts and Humanities will be eligible to vote. The six candidates will be allowed to submit new statements to appear in the ASI pamphlet of the "Mustang Daily" May 18.

Other discrepancies in the pamphlet were not contested within the required 24 hours after the election.

"The entire thing (pamphlet) is full of inproperies," said former ASI Controller Charles Dickey. "It's a hypocrisy.

The quality of education needs to be worthwhile to justify the cost of rising fees. Baker said during the half hour speech.

Baker added that since two state subcommittees have rejected the fee increases recommended by Governor George Deukmejian, the issue will be set-tled in conference committee.

We are on relatively safe ground with summer quarter, Baker said. Summer quarter will go on this summer and next summer.

Baker added, however, that Cal Poly must submit a report on its cost effectiveness to the state legisla-ture by Dec. 1, 1983 to determine the future of sum-mer quarter after 1984.

Baker said that studies on possible reorganization of the structure of the Cal Poly campus are proceed-ing more slowly than he anticipated.

We shouldn't rush the process, he said. "We have to assess what we are doing." Reorganization committee will deal with combining and separating campus departments and schools. Decisions on possible reorganization will be delayed until after summer quarter.

Baker also discussed the changes in commencement policy. He had made a recommendation to the Student Senate earlier this quarter to allow only four tickets per graduate at commencement ceremonies. He rescinded that decision last week to allow graduates to purchase as many tickets as they felt necessary. The ceremonies were previously open to all spectators. Fifteen hundred more people than Mustang Stadium's 12,500 person capacity attended.

Students are being offered a large body of knowledge by their increasing college enrollment. On the other hand, there is the ideal woman portrayed by the media.

"All of these things affect us collectively as women and also as individuals," Coleman said. "We need to learn to weed through all the information thrown at us."

For this pose, Coleman has created her own survival kit. The kit is not real, it is imaginary and each individual fills it in her own way.
CAM free speech resolution passed by Senate
by Mary Hennessey

After referring the section regarding Poly Royal to a committee for two weeks, the ASI Student Senate passed the Campus Administrative Manual section 700 resolution regarding free speech on campus.

The Senate voted unanimously to pass the resolution which revises free speech procedures on campus. Included in the passage was the creation of an Appeals Board to review decisions that prevent individuals from free expression.

The free speech resolution also called for the changing of the Poly Royal Advertising and Petition Policy to the Poly Royal Policy regarding free speech. This part was separated from the remainder of CAM 700 since it generated the most heated debate during earlier meetings.

Major changes in CAM 700 include the deletion of section 715 which deals with the clearance of material regarding the university. Current policy requires material "dealing with any aspect of the university for publication or distribution off campus be cleared through the Public Affairs Office." CAM 700 eliminates such clearance.

Section 772 was also deleted. This section requires that the president's office clear any "prominent or controversial speakers appearing on campus." The task force also recommended that CAM 772 be deleted. It states that any speaker on campus who represents an organization must be approved by the adviser.

The task force consisting of faculty members and students recommended the revisions. Task force member student Mike Meeks addressed the Student Senate on the issue of Poly Royal.

"Poly Royal is at least a limited public forum," he said. "We should consider legal precedence when considering free speech. I don't believe censorship is fitting the time, place or manner of Poly Royal," said Meeks.

Randy Jones, senator from the school of Agriculture and Natural Resources clarified with Meeks the basic disagreements that arise concerning Poly Royal.

Those disagreements concern whether or not the Poly Royal supervisor has the right to pull material, the distribution of material in a particular area, and petitions.

"What we are looking for is an accurate representation of groups and an accurate representation of the Cal Poly atmosphere," said ASI President Sandra Clary. "A group holding something to sign (petition) is an accurate portrayal of that group. But censorship by the Executive Board is also OK as long as there is a deadline so an appeals process can be worked out."

Ag, NRM clubs to compete in Young Farmers trap shoot
by Marilyn Freeman

The Cal Poly Young Farmers Club is sponsoring its second annual trap shoot Saturday at 1 p.m. at the Santa Margarita Gun Club.

The event will feature 13 clubs from the School of Agriculture and Natural Resources, said Bob McClure, chairman of the Young Farmer Trap Shoot.

The combined scores of the five team members will determine the winner of the team competition. In addition, there will be a trophy for the highest individual score.

The awards will be presented at the Ag Council barbecue that afternoon at Santa Rosa Park.

"The trap shoot is a good way for clubs to get together on a more personal basis," said McClure. "It should be a lot of fun!"

Baker emphasized that graduates should limit the number of tickets they buy.

"We have opened up access to tickets but 4,000 students potentially qualify to graduate. If each took 8 tickets there would be 32,000 spectators."

"Tickets will be available for graduates from May 23 to May 27."

Student case dismissed

Charges of possession of stolen property against Marjorie Ann Miller were dismissed in court on May 12 because one line on the affidavit was unsigned, according to a Cal Poly Public Safety Investigator.

"Because of the lack of a signature on a piece of paper, they threw the whole case out," Investigator Wayne Hall said. "It's just a little line in the middle of nowhere on the form."

The action occurred during a hearing on a defense motion to suppress evidence and invalidate the search warrant in Miller's case, Hall said. The presiding judge found that the evidence and search warrant were both valid, he said, but then dismissed the case on the technicality.

Deputy District Attorney Mark Welden will appeal the decision, Hall stated. Both Welden and the court records were unavailable at press time.

Miller was charged with possession of stolen property after a search warrant was served on January 13 and property belonging to the Cal Poly Natural Resources Management Department and and state of Montana was allegedly found in her possession. Charged with Miller was Professor Robert Wambach, but charges against him were dropped by Welden because of lack of evidence.

New IFC president promotes frat contributions

by Linda Reiff

"The crowd of Greeks began chanting "Rojo," as the new Inter-Fraternity Council president was announced at the Greek Week ceremonies on May 8.

Dan Robinson, a member of Delta Tau fraternity, was elected president. Like his predecessor, Lawney Falloon, Robinson has noticeably red hair, thus gaining the nickname "Rojo."

"I'm sure he'll keep it in the tradition of red-headed officers," Falloon said.

Other officers elected to the 1983-84 executive board are: John Hermle, from Phi Kappa Psi, vice president; John Faust, from Theta Chi, treasurer; Mike Puinte, from Theta Chi, secretary; Bob Griffin, from Alpha Upsilon, sports chairman; Tracy Towner, from Sigma Alpha Epsilon, rush chairman; and Scott Progaletti, from Alpha Gamma Rho, social chair.

Robinson, who was IFC social chairman this past year, has several goals in mind for the fraternity system.

"We're starting president meetings, which we will hold once every month. Each president from each house will come, and we'll all sit down together and air any problems," Robinson said.

"We're all going to sit down at the first meeting, the presidents and the executive board, and set some exact goals for next year," he said.

Robinson hopes the fraternities' relationship with the community improves next year.

He also sees the presidents' meetings as a way to bring all the fraternities closer together.

"The main purpose of the IFC is to unite the houses. If we work together, we can gain power, and together solve any problems," Robinson said.

"You must be able to visualize your kit as being real, you must pack it yourself, and you must fill it only with things you will use," Coleman told the audience.

Coleman gave the audience examples of what to pack by telling what she packs in her kit.

"The human connection takes care of my intellectual needs," she said.

"I cannot condone long faces or women who are angry about being women," Coleman said.

The third thing Coleman packs is called the "humor connection." The world today is a very serious place, she said. Everyone needs things which will help retain a sense of humor.

"Women are often led to feel imperfect as women," Coleman said. "I cannot condone long faces or women who are angry about being women," Coleman said.

"It has come to my attention that because of the nature of the programs and speakers at graduation that we attract people who have nothing to do with the graduates," Baker said. "It is my idea that access should only occur through graduates, therefore I proposed the ticket allocation."

The Students for Personal Safety, a group once powerful enough to force the San Luis Obispo Judge's Council to stiffen bail requirements for accused rapists, will become active again if in concern about on-campus crime. Hall residents, for example, will be appalled that the bail for an accused rapist was less than $150.

The group was formed and immediately launched a petition drive to increase the bail for accused rapists. "That part was successful," Hall said.

The group went beyond this and began noting on-campus hazards in lighting, landscape and buildings and taking these hazards to the Public Safety Department for action. The students organized rape awareness programs and also attended court hearing in which they had an interest, which kept public attention focused on these cases, Hall explained.

The "court-watching" was one of the group's most effective functions. Hall said, "If the judge that there's all this attention, he's more likely to act for public safety.

The rape-awareness seminars presented by the students were also valuable, he said. "It was more effective (than the public safety department's own presentations). It reached more people."

Unfortunately, after the rape case was over, enthusiasm for the program began to wane. Some of the personnel involved were transferred, and the transient nature of the student population also contributed to its demise. The organization died out completely after about a year," investigator Wayne Carmack explained.

A heavy caseload has kept the investigators from making a concerted effort to revive the group, but now, in conjunction with Poly PR, the department is trying to reactivate the organization. "We're looking for volunteers to become part of that group," Carmack explained.

Reorganization of the group will be tougher this time. Hall said, as there is no catalyst such as the rape to spur the group. "Thank God. But the fact that we're being proactive rather than reactive makes it harder." The original group had about 15 hardcore members, Hall said, and the investigators are trying for at least that many this time. "We'd like to see the group get as big as it possibly can.

Though the public safety department will assist with the initial organizational steps, the group is a student group and will be run entirely by members. Hall stressed, "It's an organization designed strictly for students.

The students involved will have unlimited flexibility in deciding and carrying out their functions, he continued, "There's no rigid function of the group," he said. "It's real open.

And the group isn't all work and no play, Hall added. "It's also a social organization," he said. The original group organized parties and barbeques, he noted, and enjoyed a distinct advantage. "You can feel reasonably safe about the people in the group."

Students interested in participating or having suggestions for the group can contact either Carmack or Hall at the Public Safety Department, extention 2281.

The little club sport that could not make varsity

Women's soccer enters state championship

By Dave Wilcox
Staff Writer

Why aren't members of the Cal Poly women's soccer team smiling? In only its third year of competition, the squad sailed through a breezy 9-1-2 season, good enough to perch it atop the seven-team southern division of the California Collegiate Women's Soccer Conference and earn one of four spots in the state championships tonight and Saturday at UC Santa Barbara.

But the team's situation is bleak. The women's soccer "team" is actually an ASI club and, being such, is not allowed to affiliate with any NCAA team. So when the other six teams in the southern division (UCSB, San Diego State, UCLA, Cal State Long Beach, UC San Diego, and Cal State Northridge) make the switch to varsity level next season, the Mustang women will not have a chance to defend their title.

Sue Landis, women's soccer club president, explains the problem succinctly: "We need recognition (as a varsity team) so we can play in the league next year."

That recognition would come from the athletic department, but according to Athletic Director Dick Heaton, such an action isn't possible at this point.

"At the present time, I don't see any time when we'll have them as a varsity club," Heaton said.

Judy King, who as vice president of the club has acted as a liaison between Heaton and the team, said the club has been seeking varsity status since about November, when many of the other teams in the league announced they were going to become varsity.

"I don't think we would be pushing for varsity if everyone else (in the league) wasn't going to be varsity. We want to play ball.

"But King, who is also the team's left halfback, said there are some other reasons Heaton isn't enthusiastic about making the team a varsity sport.

"I think he feels all (athletic) clubs will want to follow our lead," King said. Heaton also thinks, King said, that though the team isn't asking for money now, "a few years down the line we will."

Heaton agreed that both of these situations do indeed pose real problems for the athletic department.

"There is a problem when we accept one club sport all the others want to be recognized," Heaton explained.

Though money right now isn't a real obstacle, Heaton remarked that he believes, "eventually that's the next step," he said. "In that light, funding is a problem."

But for the women's soccer team, the problem will be finding other teams to play. If a team is not a member of a league, other teams usually will not schedule it. Goalie Liz Pawek said, "If we don't get recognized we'll have to play at a lower level."

But Heaton pointed out that as a club activity, "people were aware when they took they wouldn't become a team."

Meanwhile, the Mustangs open the state playoffs tonight at 5 against either UC Berkeley or UC Davis, both northern division representatives. San Diego State is the other southern school.

Head coach Alex Crozier, who is also a member of the Poly men's soccer team, perhaps best summed up the helplessness of the women's squad when asked whether winning the state crown would help its chances to become a varsity team.

"It can't hurt."
Ehrig advances in NCAA tourney

Lisa Ehrig will enter quarterfinal competition this morning in the NCAA Division II Women's Tennis Championships at Pomona.

Polly's No. 2 singles player Kathy Ball at North Dakota Thursday in a second round match 6-1, 6-2. She earned that chance by topping top-seeded Alyssa Avey of Florida Southern, 6-1, 6-3, on Wednesday.

Ehrig, a transfer from Cal State Bakersfield, will face Sandra El-lott of the University of Northern Colorado. If she wins, she will head into semifinal competition at 10 a.m.

All was not well, though, with the entire Cal Poly representation. Ehrig and No. 1 singles player Laurie Moss were eliminated on Thursday in doubles competition, losing 7-6, 6-4 to Patty Yates and Christine Ticher of the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga. On Wednes­day Moss dropped out of singles competition to Nora Moreno of Stephen Austin, 6-3, 6-2.

In San Marcos Texas are men's tennis repre­sentatives at the NCAA Division II championships. Scheduled there are Tyler Corse, Dave Reynolds and Andrew Weber. Corse and Reynolds share doubles.

Lisa Ehrig will enter quarterfinal competition this morning in the NCAA Division II Women's Tennis Championships at Pomona.

Polly's No. 2 singles player Kathy Ball at North Dakota Thursday in a second round match 6-1, 6-2. She earned that chance by topping top-seeded Alyssa Avey of Florida Southern, 6-1, 6-3, on Wednesday.

Ehrig, a transfer from Cal State Bakersfield, will face Sandra El-lott of the University of Northern Colorado. If she wins, she will head into semifinal competition at 10 a.m.

All was not well, though, with the entire Cal Poly representation. Ehrig and No. 1 singles player Laurie Moss were eliminated on Thursday in doubles competition, losing 7-6, 6-4 to Patty Yates and Christine Ticher of the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga. On Wednes­day Moss dropped out of singles competition to Nora Moreno of Stephen Austin, 6-3, 6-2.

In San Marcos Texas are men's tennis repre­sentatives at the NCAA Division II championships. Scheduled there are Tyler Corse, Dave Reynolds and Andrew Weber. Corse and Reynolds share doubles.

The Last Word:

Cookie mania

"Let's hear it for the chocolate chip cookie! In the history of food there has been everything so enjoyable, so utterly satisfying as the ol' chippero. Think about it. Chocolate chip cookies have a definite role in our society. They are nothing like a freshly baked, warm Toll House cookie to solve a crime or argue over a conflict. What man alive can turn up his nose at Mrs. Fields? And face it, we all give Mother's Angel Food Chocolate Chip cookies the highest standing ovation. But there is also a lot to be said for the irresistability of raw cookie dough. Parents all know that their kids have never bought Pillsbury chocolate chip cookie dough solely for the satisfaction of eating it uncooked. Chocolate chip cookies could change the structure of our social system. With proper training, we could solve peace in the world and end all tensions. Imagine Reagan and Andropov sitting down to a plate of chocolate chip cookies barely out of the oven. White House and Kremlin would talk and cultural barriers would be washed away with the last swig of milk. And wouldn't it be nice if wars were fought with chocolate chips instead of bullets? Soldiers would return from battle weary and overweight, but they would return.

No, the chocolate chip cookie is not a culinary creation to be taken lightly. Its values go well beyond its implicatiosn.

An otter view

Regarding your letter on the status of the sea otter (in the May 2 issue of the "Mustang Daily"), it is worth exposing some of your misleading impressions for the sake of the guileless ones whose votes you hoped to win. I will not be apathetic, nor let the pure adorableness of this creature influence the resolution to this problem, but simply suggest another outlook. You started your letter by claiming that a 1977 proposal led to almost total destruction of our local recreational and commercial shell fishery. As a local diver and lover of shellfish I can testify that the only destruction of shellfish is caused by man himself with his "strip mine" harvesting of the sea. This can be proven by the fact that in coves isolated from shellfish harvesters, but not to sea otters, there are plentiful abalones, recent dive trips of mine have brought home seventeen abalones. Of course seventeen abalones would not quench your appetite, but it does reveal the sea otter is not a ruthless consuming savage.

Another false impression you made was on the 10,000 mile range of the sea otter, only 200 miles being harvested. The public should know that otters are very rare in Southern and Baja California, and that people do harvest abalone and lobster from San Diego to Monterey, which extends your 200 miles a little.

Since Southern and Baja California are virtually without sea otters, let's see what has happened to their shellfish industry. It just so happens that the world-renowned Jacques Cousteau made a movie on the situation, and here is what happened: The sea otter is the only predator to the sea urchin (that spiny little red ball that sits on the ocean floor which happens to be the urchin's main diet); without otters the sea urchins multiply exponentially and both rob the food from the abalones and literally destroy kelp beds (which are very important to the eco-chain). So, what do you get? Depleted kelp beds and plant life, fewer abalones, and a barren ocean floor littered with spiny sea urchins.

You had something to say in defense of your commercial shellfish industry, that is OK, but your tactics of using two flagrant extremes such as 1) no otter control and no commercial or recreational shell fishery, and 2) elimination of all sea otters, to make your proposal of 3) proper sea otter management look appealing is quite unreasonable. You failed to mention that the otter has natural predators that control its population. It was also conveyed to me, through a reliable source, that nearly half of the sea otter population was killed by recent winter storms. It game's just another opportunity cost, similar to the trees, rivers, and coal mines. The situation must be researched and decided upon without the bias of extremist groups. Your idea of seeding is commendable. A suggestion on my part would be to ship some otters down south to munch on all those damn sea urchins.

Correction

The Mustang dance team tryout practices will be in Santa Lucia Dorm Lounge, not Santa Maria as was incorrectly reported in the May 11 issue of Poly Notes. Prizes worth $2,200 will be awarded at the Engineering Technology Design contest, not $2,200 as was reported.
