Reagan to Marines—‘fire a few salvos’

ALGIERS (PU)—The USS New Jersey, its stay off the coast of Lebanon officially terminated Friday by President Reagan, was sized as it made its way out of the Mediterranean Sea through the Straits of Gibraltar, anchoring off the Algerian coast in an effort to quell the rebel uprising.

After complying with President Reagan’s orders to “fire a few salvos” into the capital city of Algiers and then “land those darn Marines,” the battle-hungry guns fell continuously silent when the president called back after an aide informed him the country had gained its independence from France nearly 20 years ago.

Thirty Marines died, however, when the truck they were riding in overturned after hitting a pothole. The U.S. troops had landed before the mistake had been clarified.

President Reagan appeared on national television and said he assumed “full responsibility” for the soldiers’ deaths. That brings to nearly 300 the number of deaths of American servicemen President Reagan has taken personal responsibility for.

Meanwhile, the latest Gallup poll shows that Reagan is more popular than ever with American voters.

Hart’s yuppies cause ruppie for Democrats

WASHINGTON (DP)—Presidential candidate Sen. Gary Hart’s appeal to the so-called “Yuppies,” or young urban professionals, has spurred an outgrowth of numerous similar groups and may lead to a damaging rupture of the Democratic Party, a leading political analyst said Sunday.

Speaking on NBC’s “Meet the Press,” former assistant Secretary of State Ivan B. Dugan emphasized the rupture—which he termed the “ruppie effect”—will make it very difficult for the Democratic nominee, whoever it is, to stage a successful campaign against the Republican frontrunner.

Dugan, when asked to identify these emerging groups, said there are at present only a handful with strong enough numbers and effective organization to cause a serious schism in the Democratic nominating process.

Among these he cited the “yuppies,” the gay urban professionals, who Dugan noted will be highly visible at the Democratic National Convention this summer in San Francisco.

Also cited were the “yuppies,” or the poor urban professionals, this group actually representing persons who were once yuppies, but who have since lost their jobs.

Elements also exist, Dugan commented. He named them as “yuppies” who are a large contingent of housewives and househusbands who sell tupperware; the “hobbies,” the fat urban professionals; and the “drugies,” whose name, Dugan said, was self-explanatory.

Ex-governor Jerry Brown asks ‘Where’s the tofu?’

MARIN COUNTY (PU)—“Asking Where’s the tofu?” former California Governor Jerry Brown Sunday announced in a case again relying for the Democratic Party’s presidential nomination.

“There is a very large and important vegetarian constituency being ignored,” Brown remarked at his press conference to kick off his candidacy. “If a young rock star can perform for a couple of hours,” Baeker commented.

This last remark reportedly caused the loudest outcry from the Springsteen fans and prompted the threats from the Springsteen radicals.

“Bruce Springsteen is hard to find a ‘true rock star’ equivalent to calling Ghandi ‘some leader’. Would you cancel the Second Coming for some damn badminton tournament?”

“Reached by telephone, Springsteen’s initial reaction to the news was disbelief and disappointment. ‘I guess there’s just a meaness in this world,’ The Boss commented.

“Business was also had a message for Baeker: ‘Sir, I think you’re doing the students at your school a great disservice by canceling this show. And I might be forced to introduce you to Clarence Clemons.”

Baeker, when reached for comment, said he had no idea his decision would evoke such a passionate response. “I hadn’t even heard of this Springsteen character before.”

Reports of a “Save Bruce” campaign have circulated as well as attempts to organize a Poly Royal boycott.

Bruce Springsteen scheduled to appear at Poly was cancelled by President Baeker because a badminton match was being held the same night. Criticism has been leveled at the administration by fans of the deity.

Rolling papers dictate school reorganization

by Aan Arky

In a surprise move, the President's Force on Task Reorganization has announced a proposal to form three new schools at Cal Poly. The three new schools will take the place of the proposed reorganized School of Communicative Arts and Humanities and the proposed new School of Education and Applied Studies.

In addition, the Force has also changed its Jan. 26 proposal to include not one but two Academic Coordination and Liaison Councils and a third group to monitor them. The revised proposal, released yesterday, calls for three new schools: Applied Humanities, Military Education, and Technological Arts, said Force Chair, Pro-Mote Obfuscation.

Obfuscation said the departments within the two schools to be disbanded will be divided between the three new schools.

"We took a look at our former recommendations and found the departments within each school to be too much alike—we didn't want one school to become too powerful through too much consistency," said Obfuscation.

For the time being, the other schools at Cal Poly will be changed consistent with the Jan. 26 proposal, but if the breakup of Communicative Arts and Humanities and Education and Applied Studies is successful, other schools could be reorganized in the same manner.

"I just love the trust-buster image," said Obfuscation. Obfuscation said criticism of the seemingly contradiictory titles of the new schools was unfounded and merely an indication of just how diverse each new school will be.

How was the new organization derived? "Well, it was done with a very scientific procedure to guarantee truly random results in keeping with our desire for diversity within each new school. We (the Force) spent many a late night working on the system," said Obfuscation.

Obfuscation vehemently denied reports from sources close to the Daily that the organization was derived by drawing from a hat at Bull's Tavern by Obfuscation and other high-ranking Force members Friday night. Obfuscation was unable to explain why the History and Journalism Departments have been eliminated from Cal Poly according to the new report.

"We just noticed that they ran out of rolling papers that night at Bull's," said a source close to the Daily. The latest proposal also calls for an additional Academic Coordination and Liaison Council to complement the single council proposed Jan. 26. The councils are designed primarily to prevent overlapping within various departments, Obfuscation said.

A third as yet unnamed group will be made up of citizens from the community and will act as a watchdog for the newly proposed Councils.

"We think getting as many people involved in the decision making process as possible will result in quick, concise policy decisions in the student's best interest," said Obfuscation.

The two permanent councils will each have to approve members for the third group, who will go through a rigorous screening.

"We want to make sure they know little or nothing about Cal Poly," said Obfuscation. "It'll sort of be like jury duty."

The new watchdog group will be introduced to Cal Poly during Poly Royal when they will be sequestered in the dorms.

A 21-year-old math major started yelling obscenities and throwing books during an abnormal psychology class Friday, claiming to be an algebraic equation in search of a solution.

Scott Sofrenic was apprehended by Professor Abby Normal using masking tape on his mouth and rope on his arms and legs. Normal said it was also necessary to make a cross with his fingers and yad several numbers at Sofrenic.

"It was just a terrible scene. Pages flew around everywhere, to say nothing of the filthy language in the air," he said.

But things could have been worse, said Normal. As soon as Sofrenic flew off the handle, he called the Health Center. "They responded quicker than a newly wrested arm," he said.

"The attendants should be applauded," said Normal. "I was afraid someone might get hurt if many more psychology books were thrown high in the air. We'd you know how many accidents can happen with those $60, convict watching an X-rated film," he said.

Center for further examination. One attendant, Marcus Welby, said Sofrenic continued to yell numbers and obscenities on the way to the center.

"This isn't an unusual case," said Welby. "The kid probably heard something during the lecture that triggered the response. Something like, uh, how people who use primarily the left side of the brain tend to become psychologically unstable by the age of 21, for example."

Campus group calls for more explosive courses

Two new classes have been added to the fall schedule, and a third may be added soon.

PE 555, Motor Polo, and CR 550, Vehicle Challenge, were added in response to demands from the Disabled Student Services office for more chants.

"It's getting too quiet around here," said a DSS counselor. "We thought we'd liven things up a bit."

An international study class on bullfighting, emphasizing the Cal Poly "learn by doing" process may be added soon.

President Basler is currently negotiating details for the bullfighting class, an administration spokesman said. "He's been fighting so much bull from the state, we thought he'd be qualified to do the negotiating."

In response to the DSS demands for more business, the physical education department had added extra sections of archery, fencing and rugby along with the motor polo class.

Students are required to pre-register for both new classes. Prerequisites for motor polo include a car and a California driver's license. A score sheet and a copy of the rules will be provided on the first day of class.

Prerequisites for vehicle challenges are documented proof of the student's ability to survive as a pedestrian in any major city.

The Health Center will also participate in the effort to get more students to DSS by offering a quarter-long "Pain without Gain" workshop. Public Safety will discontinue the morning traffic control near University Union as part of the project as well.

Chancellor cancels summer quarter; decision affects entire CSU system

by L.M. Schober

Summer quarter at Cal Poly has been canceled due to severe budgetary constraints. California State University Chancellor W. Ann Reynolds-Wrap said Friday.

Reynolds-Wrap first announced the decision in a closed session with the CSU Board of Trustees on March 29. In a formal statement issued Friday, Reynolds credited the termination of summer quarter to fiscal problems.

"After meeting with the Governor and the State Controller earlier this week, we concluded that the CSU budget required further trimming," said Reynolds-Wrap.

"Consequently, there will be no summer quarters offered at CSU campuses in Pomona, San Luis Obispo, Chico and Sonoma," Reynolds-Wrap said there is no possibility the decision will be reconsidered.

Cal Poly students planning to attend the summer quarter session have already organized a protest in opposition to the Governor's decision.

"Last year they threatened to take away summer quarter, and this year it looks as if there is no chance for students to finish up their graduation requirements in the summer," said Cynthia Lee, organizer of "Students Want A Summer Quarter" (SWASQ).

"SWASQ is planning to hold a rally in front of President Basker's office Wednesday, April 4, at noon to voice our opposition to the termination of summer quarter. It is our intention to have President Basker communicate our concerns to the chancellor," said Lee.

The city of San Luis Obispo is expected to suffer as well.

"We estimate that summer sales will drop by 30 to 40 percent," said David Darrof of the Chamber of Commerce. "The termination of summer quarter will definitely have a negative effect on the economy."

Students who haven't purchased their books for the quarter will just have to do without. Over the weekend, the El Corral Bookstore caught on fire.

"Last year they threatened to take away summer quarter, and this year it looks as if there is no chance for students to finish up their graduation requirements in the summer," said Cynthia Lee, organizer of "Students Want A Summer Quarter" (SWASQ).

"We estimate that summer sales will drop by 30 to 40 percent," said David Darrof of the Chamber of Commerce. "The termination of summer quarter will definitely have a negative effect on the economy."

All textbooks on the shelves were burned.

The fire department received a call Sunday from a passerby who saw flames through the windows.

"We estimate that summer sales will drop by 30 to 40 percent," said David Darrof of the Chamber of Commerce. "The termination of summer quarter will definitely have a negative effect on the economy."

Public Safety officials Sunday made no dollar estimate on the damage, although they said the figure could be at least $50,000.

Cal Poly Fire Official Jim Smoke said that person is suspected in the fire which started near the textbooks stacks in the back of the store.

Engineering turns dinner

by Pepper Linghula

Construction was halted today on the Engineering South building as a major change was made in the campus Master Plan.

The engineering building will be converted to a student dining facility, similar to the Snack Bar, President Basker announced this morning at a news conference.

"We feel that student nutrition is more important than proper classroom facilities," said Basker. "We've had a number of hungry students working in the library and we want to make things more convenient for them.

Dean Dog Jurard, who suggested the plan change to Basker last Thanksgiving, called the move "extraordinary."

"It looks like Basker is out to improve his image," said Jurard. "and what better way to get to college students than to offer them food? I mean, we've all heard about 'starving college students,' right?"

Jurard said the plan change was made after the Campus Store did such phenomenal business fall quarter.

‘Born to Add’: A rock ‘n’ roll classic
by Dave Muhu
Staff Writer

It’s April 2, it’s raining outside and I’m feeling old. On my turntable, Roy Orbison is singing for the lonely and I’m thinking about how much rock has changed since I first heard it twenty years ago. Somehow, these past few years have changed my opinion and feelings toward rock. I’ve seen things come and go: disco, heavy metal, punk, Duran Duran, and many others. But last night, I heard something that reminded me of why I listened to rock and roll in the first place. Something that captured all of its brashness, innocence and fantasy.

I have seen the future of rock and roll, and his name is Bert. Most of you know of Bert’s acting skills. He, along with his former partner, Ernie, were the only reason to watch “Seamen Street.” It seems that “Seamen Street” only scratched the surface of Bert’s talents. On his latest album, “Born to Add,” Bert has clearly proved that he is a musician on the scale of Elvis Presley, Chuck Berry, Mick Jagger and Pete Townshend.

The only proof that’s needed is in the title track. It’s an anthem for the eighties, on the scale of “My Generation” and “God Save the Queen.” It must have been with a garbage can of his own and give it the song didn’t rock out. And it does, Bert and the Street band cranks.

One of the biggest surprises of the album is the saxophone playing of the Cookie Monster. The “Big Monster” as Bert affectionately calls him, serves as the driving and spiritual force to one of the tightest rock and roll bands around today.

For just the title track, Bert’s place in the rock and roll hall of fame would be assured. But the rest of the album meets all expectations raised by “Born to Add.”

But all of these great lyrics would be wasted if the song didn’t rock out. And it does, Bert and the Street band cranks.

For just the title track, Bert’s place in the rock and roll hall of fame would be assured. But the rest of the album meets all expectations raised by “Born to Add.”

First, there are the rave up songs like “I can’t get no. Cooperation” and “Hook Around the Clock.” But Bert shows that he can play any type of music; from the blushey “Hey Food” to the mournful ballad, “I Just Want a Friend to Play with.” The latter song is a moving ballad on the scale of Otis Redding’s “Try a Little Tenderness” and made this reviewer weep.

Bert’s “Born to Add” album has everything, and fulfills the promise and hope which rock and roll gives to the younger generation. This album tackles everything: politics, philosophy, social problems and the alienation of the American youth. Plus, it teaches you how to add.

Them that real men go for ‘Uncommon Valor’
by Chet Cornhead
Arts/Entertainment

The way I figure it, “Uncommon Valor” oughta win them there academy awards. It’s one of them picture shows that come along every now and again and you just know it’s gonna be a classic. It’s got just about everything; down and dirty heroes; rockets and explosions; war and sex.

Now the one of them movies that them film critics rayhooks is always a braggin on, movies like “The Big Chill” and “Terror of Endrmament.” They got to be kidding. I ain’t never seen nothin siller in all my days.

Now I did see that there movie about them astronauts and that was a pretty good show. As far as this concernin’ “Uncommon Valor” up there with Frank Sinatra and John Wayne in the Reaflman Hall of Fame. In fact after I saw that picture show I went out and bought me a brand new AC Delco for my pickup truck.

Now you folks out there who ain’t had a chance to see this here movie yet, I’ll let you in on the story. Ya see, Gene Hackman is this here military type feller whose son is a Vietnamese MIA. So he gets a bunch of his son’s old army buddies together and they proceed to go rescue him and any other fellers they can find.

Now these guys is all real tough, but the toughest one of them has got to be Tex Cobb. (Yeah, he’s the same critter that let boxing champ Larry Holmes beat on his face for fifteen rounds, but he never knocked him out. I ain’t never seen no one as tough as him before.)

This guy wore a hand grenade around his neck all the time; that way if he ever decided to leave he had the means. And he did it too; he blew himself up, blew himself real good. He was blowing all them comrades away with a machine gun and then some gokk shot him. He knew he was wasted, so he pulled the pin and jumped on a whole mess of them. Cool.

The whole movie was like that, blowing things up real good. But there was some bad parts. Like they didn’t have enough girls.

Baeker steals New York primary

NEW YORK (PU) — There was a surprise winner in today’s Democratic Primary in New York — Warren Baeker, 43, President of California State Polytechnic University in San Luis Obispo, took 72% of the vote and 181 of the delegates as an overwhelming percentage of the New Yorkers wrote Baeker’s name in on the ballots.

Apparently the voters in New York were under the impression Senator Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., had entered the primary. “The resemblance is uncanny,” said several of the voters when asked by exit pollsters why they voted for Baeker. Stated one voter, “I don’t see that much of a resemblance,” said Sen. Gary Hart when asked about Baeker’s victory. Hart came in a distant second with 19% of the vote.

Jackson, who leads the national Democratic ticket, said, “Sorry, we thought he was our school president.”

Ironically, Sen. Kennedy was unavailable for comment as he is recovering in a hospital on the West Coast after being attacked by a mob of enraged university students.

Gary Hart, when asked about Baeker’s victory, said, “I knew the students here at Cal Poly love this school so much that they would stay forever if they could.”

Baeker was in New York attending a convention for university presidents. He drew extensive media attention for an inspiring speech he gave at the convention in which he called for all universities to adopt the “Learn by doing” philosophy that has helped make the central coast of California the place to go to college.

Baeker called the prestigious Ivy League schools “haven for the mediocre and the type of schools whose student body is made up of a bunch of panics.”

The university president has been approached by the Democrats as a possible candidate but refused to comment on the matter.

“I believe it. Sometimes I just can’t control myself. So much has happened in the last couple of days, it boggles my mind.”

Baeker announces graduation dumped

By Sue Perscoop

Because of all the seating problems associated with commencement, President Warren Baeker has decided to cancel all graduations this year. “There is just no way all the graduating seniors will be able to invite as many guests as they would like to,” said one of Baeker’s top aides said, “so now they won’t have to worry about inviting anyone.”

Baeker said he didn’t think anyone would be too upset about not being able to graduate.

“I know the students here at Cal Poly love this school so much that they would stay forever if they could,” Baeker said.

Since the school year started in September, several committees and organizations — in conjunction with the ASI and President Baeker’s office — have been trying to solve the problem of where to put everyone who would like to attend a Cal Poly graduation.

One suggestion was that there be several separate graduation ceremonies, but most students didn’t like that idea because they wouldn’t be able to graduate with their best friends.

Another suggestion was that the graduation ceremony be held in Poly Canyon with a reception following at the Vista Grande Cafeteria. The ASI said that suggestion, saying that the guests would get their clothes dirty walking back to the canyon.

“There was a problem finding anyone willing to work that long and hard,” said President Baeker.

“Do you think I want to see that food one more day than I have to?” Tom Chickwich, a Vista Grande employee, said.

“Most graduating seniors aren’t too upset about not being able to graduate this year.”

“I’ll just take more and more classes until President Baeker lets me graduate,” Millie Mestar, engineering senior said.

“Besides,” Mestar added, “I’ve grown pretty attached to Cal Poly after six years.”

Asked what produced the hot air flowing from the building, Nolgy said, “originally, it appeared to me that the air is rising, but that doesn’t explain why the hot air is scattered at the top floor as well.”

Nolgy explained that because of Baeker’s recent decision not to have a graduation ceremony, the people of New Jersey are in an uproar. In fact, a warrant has been issued for Baeker’s arrest.

He is being charged with crimes against humanity.

Hot air shores Administration Building

By Stewart Simpson

A senior power plant engineering major announced Thursday his plans to power portions of the campus with naturally occurring hot air.

As part of his senior project, Tom Nolgy plans to use hot air surrounding the Administration Building to turn turbines, which would in turn run generators and ultimately produce electricity.

“I figure we’ve got enough hot air on this campus to power at least all the dorms, and if my revised calculations are close to correct, we may even have enough to light up the whole campus,” Nolgy said.

Plant melts down minutes after fired up by Dwayne D. Tubb

TUESDAY

Arvia Beach was evacuated along with several other parts of the central Ornada, after the newly-named Power Plant by the Sea nuclear power plant, shaken by a 7.5 earthquake, which took place before water was going into full operation.

The nuclear power plant former name was the Diable Canyon Nuclear Power Plant.

"It really is not as bad as it sounds," said plant spokesman Lila A. Row.
"It means it's not a full scale meltdown, it's only a partial meltdown. It could be worse. We could be in China right now.

Engineers at the plant headquarters in San Francisco announced that the mechanism which lever the red rods at the plant had been rendered inoperable by the earthquake.
The plant which had problems getting a license to operate for the first time, will get the water in for full operations only two days ago after submitting a request to change the name.

"It was really easy. All we did was cancel the name of the plant and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission gave us the OK," said Row.

NRC officials said that they were not aware the plant had been licensed.
"You're kidding, right? Oh my God, we thought it was a completely different plant," said an NRC official who asked his name not be used. (It's a Rita Act.)

"Sure, I admit some of the guys really realized what happened," said the anti-nuclear protesters, but hey we aren't out, said the official.

Although the central coast of California will remain unlivable for several weeks there were no casualties reported because so much water soaking into the earthquake, in under the wire before the area said, "We told you so. But would you listen?"

One student is outraged.

Another student is so mad he is staring a petition.

"I don't understand why they have to turn off the water for a week so that the company can fix an underground leak.

The dorms involved are the North Mountain and red-brick dorms.

However, it involves everyone living in campus because those affected by the shut-off that starts April 10 will be turning off the water for two days so that residents advisors and students have a chance to find it safely is to turn the water slide," said Calhoon. "The only way to sooner it's fixed, the batter.

Adm nistration officials said they regret that it happened but feel the announcement was handled well.

They told the water company to hold down for a week so that residents advisors of the affected dorms will be able to meet with students. Most students have not been told about the leak.

The reactions of those who have told official in total fury to mild amusement.

"I think it will be hilarious to see all the people trying to get into the shower in the morning," said Tony Anctil, a resident from Yosemite dorm.

Brady said that there is going to be no water for showers and then hike back only to remember we forgot to brush our teeth.

"President Baeker and the administration felt they could not predict the future safely enough to agree to the first computer deal," said the official. "This new offer is in short-range, extremely feasible and convincing, and beneficial for the financial health of the university because we know the kids like concerts.

Says the new offer was made with precisely that intent. "We figured some schools would be cautious about having to plan so far ahead about buying Apple equipment, so Mr. Wozniak came up with the concerts deal that would still be helpful to the university and great financially for us.

"Cal Poly could be seeing anything from 'Willie Nelson to the Marshall Tucker Band, from Moby Dick to Def Leppard, from Sheena Easton to Genesis," said Says, who added that concerts we have cost Cal Poly up to $200,000 each to promote.

The official said the concerts will probably be held in the Mustang Stadium.

"Packing all the kids we expect to attend these concerts into that little stadium we may have let the Master Plan go a little bit easier with the public," the official added.
In an unprecedented move, the NCAA late last night postponed its men's basketball tournament final game between Georgetown and Houston at the request of the Cougars.

The game has been tentatively rescheduled for Tuesday night, but the site will be the new B.C. Place in Vancouver. The Kingdome, where the semifinal games took place Saturday, was booked by baseball's Seattle Mariners. It marks the first time an American collegiate championship has been decided on foreign soil.

Houston requested the delay after All-American center Akeem Abdul Olajuwon told coach Guy Lewis he couldn't play Monday night for religious reasons. The Nigerian-born junior, a devout Muslim, must spend the day fasting and in prayer.

Lewis told his Cougars of Olajuwon's decision in a team meeting, and their squad voted not to play if the game was not postponed. Reportedly, the Cougars would warm up and then not take the floor, effectively forfeiting the game.

A spokesperson for the coaching staff said that after a "fearful and emotional discussion, the group decided to leave the university for what one termed "greener pastures."

The group descended on Athletic Director Slick Chestin with the bad news yesterday afternoon.

"Panic? Who, me? No way," said Chestin. "We're simply going to hire architecture and engineering in order to find replacements for any athletes who may transfer or course. The intramural athletes won't receive scholarships, but since they'll get to use facilities during normal waking hours they shouldn't complain.

Participants in the intramural program declined comment.

Coaches cited higher pay and the prestige of coaching at the Division I level as the main reasons for leaving Cal Poly. Some admitted the move had nothing to do with money and power but involved personal reasons.

"We just didn't want to get the hell out of dodge," said one coaching staff member who asked not to be identified. "I have no reason for me to be here. I think I'll find cookie joint and get out into the real world."

The athletes have already filled out transfer forms, said Sports Information Director Sylvester Ratfudge.

"They're (the athletes) bailing out like rats from a sinking ship," said Ratfudge. "I don't know how much more of this the department can take."
Baeker eliminates dry rule

By Dan Sing

With a sudden turnabout of attitude, Cal Poly President Warren Baeker eliminated the dry campus regulation that has been in place for so many years. "I hereby announce to have a pub on campus so I can party with students and find out where they're coming from," said Baeker in an informal interview at his campus home over five beers, two shots of Jack Daniel's, and a drink of his special cognac. When asked where the possible pub locations, Baeker said the Sandwich Plant seemed to be a likely place. "There's talk of renovating it anyway," he said. "I see this as a prime opportunity."

Why change of policy after all these years of strict enforcement? "Why not," said Baeker. "Everyone's entitled to change their mind. You might say I have seen the light. It came to me yesterday after my third lunchtime martini. Actually it wasn't a light at all. It was a voice—said 'Warren, Baeker.' With such inspiration you can see my predicament. I had no choice."

These confessions Baeker had expelled midway through the interview. As time went on, after more beers and brandy, he became increasingly more passionate. "To be perfectly honest I have always known it was a stupid regulation. It's just that I finally got the nerve to do something about it," he slurred. After making his third trip to the restroom Baeker staggered back with more glasses of wine, with a quarter, and suggested we engage in the party ritual game of quarters. It seems necessary to humor the man in order to keep the mood of the interview.

Several portions of shots later (Baeker was not the player he talked himself up to be) it became too difficult to carry on with any semblance of order. Finally, unable to wake Baeker from his comfortable couch, the interview was complete.

Lab added to human sexuality class; professor expects enrollment to triple

By Seymour Butts

Once again, Cal Poly is implementing its "learn by doing" philosophy—this time to cheers and applause of students. Beginning quarter, students who have enrolled in Psychology 302, better known as Human Sexuality, must participate in a lab section. Professor Frank Nocologh thinks the lab will add a new dimension to human sexuality classes.

"I don't see how this is any different from dissecting in a science class," said Nocologh. "Besides, we're expecting enrollment to triple in the class.

Nocologh explained that the lab will be graded on a credit no-hassle basis, so outside sexual performance won't be affected.

"There's always the risk that by giving a student a C in human sexuality lab that the student will feel incompetent. The class is meant to strengthen overall performance, not weaken it."

Student reaction was positive. Mike Hunt, an 18-year-old Home Economics major, thinks the idea stimulating. "We've finally come of age in the sex world. I never thought this would happen. I'm sure I'll guarantee you I'll be the first one signed up.

Lab sections will meet one night a week. All students enrolled must take a test and complete the required length of time for labs will be based on average male sexual activity.

Physical Education major Betty Bobb hopes the lab can get her in shape for basketball season. "I hope it lasts a while. I really like to work up a sweat," she said.

Nocologh added that only an even numbers of students will be accepted into the class, noting that partners are necessary for course requirements.
