Small chance left for Mondale as president
by Michael Finucane

No matter who pulls down the brass ring from Walter Mondale's vice presidential merry-go-round, the Democratic Party ride will come to a stop with the upcoming election.

So goes the opinion of Cal Poly political scientists, informed students and the county chairman of the Republican Party. No one or pair of candidates can change those odds.

Despite the dire predictions, Mondale continues to interview potential running mates at his North Oaks, Minn. home. Pressure is mounting on him to pick a woman, especially Rep. Geraldine Ferraro (D-N.Y.).

Ferraro and Mondale met for three hours Monday, and when the pair emerged for reporters' questions, Mondale made it clear that he would not be forced into his choice.

Observers felt the statement was meant for the National Organization of Women, whose leadership has threatened a convention floor fight if a woman is not selected.

Besides NOW, enforcement. Ferraro is also the running mate favored by delegates to the Democratic National Convention.

An Associated Press poll showed Ferraro holding a wide advantage over Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado. Of the 1,600 delegates who expressed a preference, 22 percent thought Ferraro should run with Mondale, while 10 percent percent wanted Hart.

While Ferraro seems to have the top billing, she is only one of up to a dozen potential candidates, including at least two other women.

Friday Mondale will meet with Kentucky Gov. Martha Layne Collins, and last week he interviewed San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein.

Mondale campaign spokesperson Dianne Nino said no date has been set for announcing the choice yet, and that Mondale has not excluded "any" of the candidates are serious." Nino said.

Besides the three women, Mondale has also met with a full range of political leaders, representing a great ethnic and geographic diversity.

Wednesday Mondale hosted Latino Mayer Henry Cisneros of San Antonio and earlier met with Sen. Tom Bradley of California.

"I wanted his help in terms of a vice presidential running mate has been extremely critical and political," said Dr. Randal Cruikshanks, Poly's Political Science Department Head.

"It's intended to balance the ticket both philosophically and geographically. Since Mondale is a liberal, he would have to pick someone more conservative than Cruikshanks predicted.

As to who would help Mondale most against Reagan, Cruikshanks said Mondale has to pick someone who can carry the votes. "Hart is not logical because he is a liberal from the West, and from a small state. It would be premature to say for services for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Of the 150 students surveyed, 108 people said they would vote for the lottery. Twenty-two students said they would vote against the initiative and 20 had not yet made up their minds.

If the initiative passes, 59 students said they would buy lottery tickets. Forty-three students would not play and eight did not know if they would play.

Tailgate parties, complete with beers and grills, are a tradition that will be discussed and decided upon as long as they followed the administration to hold pre-game parties, popularly known as tailgaters.

"As far as I know beer and wine will be allowed at tailgaters several hours before the games," Cal Poly Mustang Boosters president Dr. Dan Palmner said. "But a smaller percentage would actually attend.

The Cal Poly Mustang Boosters have a requested permanent concession area for the administration to hold pre-game parties, popularly known as tailgaters.

The parties will be participating in the parties is not totally clear due to conflicting reports from the administration and Mustang Booster members.

"The area mentioned is the parking lot next to Poly Grove, north of Mustang Stadium," Voss said that the area was chosen because of the need to contain and control such an activity. "The area will be strictly for the booster membership. They could open it up to anyone they wanted as long as they followed the guidelines," he said.

The guidelines and final details will be discussed and decided upon in late July when the administration and boosters meet. "We hope to have it in place by the first game against Sac State, September 6," Voss added.

"As to student participation in the pre-game parties he said, "I don't see any problem with 21-year-old students if they follow the established rules and regulations."

He emphasised that the fact that nothing has been finalized yet regarding the specific guidelines and conditions for the tailgates parties.

Tallgate parties are popular pre-game praines which are derived from parties on the back end of a station wagon or truck. There are popular activities at many schools including Fresno State University of California and University of Southern California.

Refreshments will not be sold or otherwise provided by the Boosters for the tailgate parties. Participants will have to bring their own.

Camping is scene for returning...flocks

Like the swallows that return to San Juan Capistrano each year, campgrounders will be seen descending onto the campus in flocks each summer.

Cal Poly Housing Manager Joe Riser said between 6,000 and 9,000 people will attend conferences at Poly this summer.

Another benefit Riser noted is that it pays for the facility and keeps the cost of education down. Riser said. He explained the money generated from conferences and conferences at Poly is the recruiting function it serves. said Riser.

"When you have a national conference and people find a campus interested in their field of study, it can't help but attract people."

Riser said.

He added that faculty members of other schools may be interested in transferring to Cal Poly after looking at the facilities.

Civil rights is an issue that has been dealt with at great lengths, with much struggle and pain through the era of our country's existence. Groups fighting for voting rights, black rights and women's rights have all been fighting against one thing: inconsistencies. The battles have been for the most part, successful. Now legal adults, at the age of 18, vote, not just property-owning men. Blacks are no longer subject to the separate-but-equal standard of 30 years ago. Women are realizing more and more now what it is like to be treated as an equal—in pay and in job opportunities.

Because such battles are being fought on a large scale, it is understandable that the inconsistencies take longer to correct, than, say, an inconsistency found on a university campus of 16,000 students.

Unfortunately, that isn't the case here. The administration of Cal Poly has gotten itself into a corner on an issue that proves to be of interest to many of students.

That issue is the one of permitting alcohol on campus. Cal Poly is, as everyone knows, a dry campus. That means that no alcohol is permitted on school grounds.

But alcohol has been incident at many administration-sponsored functions recently. A party given by President Baker over a year ago complete with champagne in Kennedy Library raised the question of how the administration can legitimately serve alcohol on campus without allowing the students to do the same.

Pub would create problems, not solutions

Editor:

If I came up with a reply to your column, would you listen? Does Cal Poly need a pub? I don't think so. Faking is already a problem on campus. If we had a pub, this would only make this problem worse. People don't need to be reminded to have a drink every time they walk through the U.U. I don't like walking by a bar on my way to class. Only 2700 or so students live on campus and a good majority of these are freshmen. Do they need a pub? They drink enough as it is. What percentage of college has pubs on campus? Give me some accu­rate figures before you start substantiating things out of thin air.

Like employers not hiring you. Brad, because you came from a family to go to Piano Beach and watch the fire department's pro­fessional firework display. Until fairly recently it has always been families down on the beach. Before dusk the sand would be dotted with camp fires, children with sparklers, and other legal fireworks.

I don't know when that scene died, but defunct it is. The families don't go to the beach anymore. It simply got too dangerous.

Somewhere along the line, legal fireworks became passe. Not enough color or noise or thrills. Bottle rockets and M-80s are now the vogue now. It doesn't matter that these Mexican imports are illegal.

According to theory, bottle rockets are supposed to fly upward before exploding, not into people's hair or on their blankets. Dynamite belongs in "Bonnie and Clyde" type movies—not on the beach. Yet, some fool decided to torch half a stick of the stuff 20 feet from where I was sitting last year.

The Fourth of July is getting to be as safe as unwrapped candy at Halloween.

Each year the fire department sets off the elaborate type of fireworks most people only get to see at Disneyland. This annual fire display isn't thrilling enough for some people to be willing to keep the ambulance service busy all through the night.

For anyone who hasn't seen the fire department's brilliant work, I suggest next time taking it in—from a table at Trader Nick's restaurant.

Fireworks: where's the common sense?

Maybe college is teaching me common sense along with increasing my quota of knowledge. Common sense is something I sorely lacked when it came to the Fourth of July holiday, that is until this past year.

I've lived in this county nearly all of my rapidly aging 21 years. I must be getting old. because I can remember when it was safe for a student to walk, without being reminded of potential danger, to the end of the parking lot. No fire trucks, no sirens, no crowds. Just a soft glow from the fireworks and a professional display.

The families have gotten itself into a corner on an issue that proves to be of interest to many of students. A all that we should hope for is to eliminate the inconsistency. Either all we can drink or none of us drink. It's that simple.
Reagan's chances good

"If he chooses a Feinstein or a Bradley. Mondale might just be noted as the candidate with the first minority running mate who lost." Both Settles and Crumhanks agreed Reagan's chances at re-election look very good. Settle said Reagan was both "charismatic and popular."

Crumhanks thought Reagan would win if the election were held today. A poll of likely California voters showed Reagan leading Mondale 55% to 38%, with 7% undecided.

Settles and Crumhanks agreed on the帽 long-term significance of the recent Reagan re-election. "It is no real possible for Reagan to say his days are numbered," said Settles. "There are no mandates, no real boundaries for the future Reagan administration."

"In the evening, a young woman was seen running towards the Reagan re-election headquarters in the streets of Los Angeles," said Settles. "We are going to see no mandates, no real boundaries for the future Reagan administration."

"Reagan's chances good" was also a popular theme among the candidates. Settles said Reagan had a "good chance" at re-election, and Crumhanks agreed. "He is a very popular candidate," said Crumhanks. "He has a good chance at re-election."

Enjoying the summer...

by Patti Winfield

Friday is almost here again. The day you’ve been waiting for all week. So, how do the 4,000 plus Cal Poly students spend their summertime Fridays in San Luis Obispo?

The activities students look for are of a different breed than those during the regular school year. The usual classes, people and T.U.’s are absent and the question hangs, what will you do on Friday?

From the moment your eyes open and your feet hit the floor, you know it’s Friday and you have no solid plans. Your laundry has reached the peaks of Mount Everest, your apartment looks like Messy Marvin’s closet, there is always homework to do and even the mice can’t find anything to eat in the kitchen. All the necessities demand your attention, but all of that can wait.

Maloney’s Gym, Health Fitness Center and the YMCA are all hot spots on Friday mornings. “Working out is the only thing that gets me out of bed on Fridays,” said Katie Phelps, senior Interior Design major.

Those students who prefer less regimented workouts take to the streets of San Luis Obispo. You can see a runner or cyclist at any corner just waiting for that light to turn green and send them on their way once again.

By noon the gyms and streets become quiet and the student population heads for Avila Beach. The parking spaces and beach fill up by noon. So, if you want to get a prime parking place for your car and your body you better get there early.

Body surfing, Frisbee throwing and getting a tan are all pastimes of the many students who hit Avila on Fridays.

By the time the tastesbuds start bored’ perched themselves on the streets of San Luis Obispo looking for something to do. Some are easily satisfied. Two freshman students who were “extremely bored” perched themselves on the corner of Higuera and Marsh Streets ready for some serious people watching.

But, if you are like most of the students, you find something to do on your summer Fridays. The fun won’t jump out-and grab you. However, if you hear a steady 3-to-5 minute siren, turn on your AM radio to the Emergency Broadcast System (KVEC, 920 or KUNA, 1400) and listen for special instructions. The sirens are for emergencies, including earthquakes, storms, dam failures or hazardous material spills. They were installed in case of an emergency at the Diablo Canyon Power Plant. A booklet has been sent to county residents from Cayucos to the Nipomo Mesa. This Emergency Response Plan Booklet explains the action to take in the event of an emergency at the Diablo Canyon Power Plant.

Knowing what to do can help you and your family get through any hazardous situation. Please familiarize yourself with the light blue Emergency Response Plan Booklet and keep it in your phone book where you can find it in case it’s needed. If you need another copy, call the County Office of Emergency Services, 549-5011, or PG&E’s Community Activities Department, 544-3334.

Listen to this sound.

Cal Poly students enjoy the serenity of summer quarter, however much of the staff on campus prefers the fast pace of the regular school year. "Summer quarter really isn't my favorite quarter," said Paige Hagan, secretary to the dean of students. "I love the students and I really miss them when they are gone."

The switchboard operators have the same attitude toward the students. "By the time summer comes I am ready for the slow down," said one operator. "But, when September comes I am anxious for the students to come back. The students give our job some variety."

Ken Walker, accounting technician in the administration building finds that summer is his least favorite quarter in terms of his job. "It's the busiest time of the year for me," he said. "The fiscal year ends and all the work starts to pile in."

Most students agree on the positive aspects of summer quarter, however.

Students who live far from the campus rejoice in the ease with which they can park during the summer.

Rachel Agathe, sophomore business major agrees and adds, "It is easier to park in town too."

Rachel also works at the copy center on campus and enjoys the break from the long lines of customers that she has during the regular year.

Most students who stay for summer quarter take light loads. This allows them the extra time to take advantage of the great weather San Luis Obispo has to offer in the summer.

Jadar Mehari, graduating senior, finds that instructors are easier to get in touch with. "There are less students so you have a better chance to talk to them on a personal basis."

Faculty members enjoy the quiet of the campus as well. Dr. T. E. Bertson, philosophy professor, likes the fact that "the people are more relaxed and the students seem to be calm." He also added, "This may just be an illusion."

Professor of English, Mike Wendt said, "I like summer quarter because it gives me more time to read and do research."

As with anything, different groups of people feel differently about different things. One opinion is shared amongst everyone, though. The most positive aspect of summer quarter is that the ice cream parlor is staying open.

Enterprise may not be on ‘final voyage’

By Julie Rach
Robert Duval

Stilled as the ‘final voyage of the Enterprise,' ‘Star Trek III: The Search for Spock' offers a story in the ‘Star Trek’ tradition, based on friendship, honor and ethics.

The movie begins by reviewing the end of ‘Star Trek II'—the death of Spock. The crew of the Enterprise is returning from that mission to Starfleet for shore leave and a new assignment.

As the ship is docking at Starfleet, Dr. McCoy starts acting strangely, asking Admiral Kirk to let him home. Kirk bends a few rules and lets the friend go. He commandeers the Enterprise and, with a skeleton crew, sets off to the planet Genesis—where Spock's body is. The story then breaks into two parts—Kirk's loyalty to his friends, Spock and McCoy, takes back seat to the battle between the Federation and the Klingons (who also want the secret to the Genesis planet).

However, Kirk's son, David, one of the creators of Genesis, admits he used a material that wasn't safe while creating Genesis because it cut corners and saved time. Still the Klingons press on.

Kirk and his crew win out (naturally) and his loyalty to Spock and their friendship becomes the focus of the rest of the film.

‘Star Trek III' offers action, adventure and fine acting, especially by Christopher Lloyd (‘Taxi's' Rev. Jim) as the slimy Klingon commander. Mark Lenard as Spock's father Sarek is also particularly good, and James B. Sikking (‘Hill Street Blues' Howard) has fun with a bit part as a Federation officer.

The special effects and other elements of ‘Star Trek' technology have evolved nicely. The props and space battles blend together.

The props and space battles blend together with the story. They don't work against it as they did in the first ‘Star Trek' film.

All this, combined with the story, creates probably the best ‘Star Trek' film of the three made so far. The film concludes with ‘the adventure continues...' which leaves the audience to believe there will be more.
