Reagan aid cuts target of letter campaign

By JULIA PRODIS

Thousands of letters urging Congress to reduce federal spending were being signed by Cal Poly students and parents.

The letter drive, organized by the ASI President's executive staff and students, is an effort to influence the politicians by concentrating more than 1,500 signatures on several national lawmakers. In California, Davis, told a group of students, signed a letter to every senator, is an effort to influence the politicians by concentrating more than 1,500 signatures on several national lawmakers.

Dr. Lawrence Nelson received another grant recently by Cal Poly. "One is that it will increase the costs, not cut into the budget, but will get involved and want to go through the full review," he explained. Another advantage is that having another source for help in another case, will be able to participate in rush next fall but can begin again rush in 1986. Three weeks after the other sororities have their rush.

The next step is to get Alpha Omicron Pi's bylaws approved and to begin the colonization process. However, they will not be able to participate in rush next fall but can begin again rush in 1986. Three weeks after the other sororities have their rush.

Who and is Reagan listening to?

Yesterday our president embarked on a voyage in an attempt to strengthen relations with West Germany. While he is there he will be visiting sites as a guest of West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

One of the stops announced April 11 is to a military cemetery in Bitburg, where Ronald Reagan is scheduled to participate in a wreath laying ceremony with the Chancellor.

Reagan has called this decision "morally right" and one which will cement a reconnection between the two countries which were adversaries not long ago.

But following the wishes of the Chancellor isn't the best idea. On Sunday Reagan will be making a visit to a cemetery where thousands of German soldiers are buried — including 49 SS soldiers, the special Nazi force responsible for the extermination of millions of Jews.

Is this in the best interest of the American people? Probably not.

A ceramic wreath laying is an obvious symbol of mourning, and Reagan represents America — one who killed six million people does make sense — especially when many of the victims' descendents are part of the American public.

The youth may not have a grasp of the feelings and torture the victims of the Holocaust went through.

Apparently Reagan doesn't either. Last month the President defended his trip to Bitburg by likening SS soldiers buried in the cemetery to insurgents and terrorists, saying "You can sacrifice the quantity of life to improve the quality of someone else's life." He cites as an example the Vietnamese people who fought in the Vietnam War for "freedom" and "democracy," but came home with problems that are still real to them today — including psychological trauma and rejection by the public for their role in an unpopular war.

But above all, it was a time to mourn for the Americans who went to Vietnam and never came back.

People at Cal Poly should take the time this week to think about the Vietnam War and the lesson that's been learned from it.

We're lucky to live in a different time from the decades of strife and crises that dominated nations of Africa is virulently pro-terror. Robert Mugabe, a self-proclaimed Marxist-Leninist, the successor nation of Zimbabwe is a shamables.

The connection between Nicaragua and Vietnam is a different situation in another part of the world.

But it's something the American people are supposed to watch on, because one thing is clear: the United States should never have to mark the tenth anniversary of a military action ever again.

Tenth year Vietnam memory: hopefully never again

As people recovered from the vacuum atmosphere of Poly Royal last weekend and the three-year semester began a week ago, an important anniversary in American history passed by virtually unnoticed Tuesday at Cal Poly.

On April 30, 1975 the last Americans were airlifted from the roof of the American Embassy in Saigon, symbolizing the end of American involvement in the Vietnam War.

In 1975, 10 years since that day, when even the most skeptical of American people were forced to face an unpleasant fact: the last lives lost in the war were lost in what war in which millions of men were shipped overseas and 58,600 lost their lives.

The tenth anniversary of the fall of Saigon may have been forgotten at Cal Poly, but it was remembered in Vietnam. The three major television networks carried special programs devoted to the topic and newspapers explored the issues into depth.

It was a time for Americans to reflect once again on the values that led this country to involve itself in a war in southeast Asia in the name of anti-Communism.

The former government of Nicaragua and El Salvador, and by engaged in violent campus protests.

We don't have to worry about getting drafted and having to send men to their deaths and a lifetime of fighting a war halfway around the world.

But that shouldn't stop us from considering the issue of a country's value in the context of its people.

Tuesday, the same day that marked the tenth anniversary of the fall of Saigon, the Reagan Administration went to the White House with some very special recommendations, a position that hopefully isn't coincidental.

President Ronald Reagan visited the place which represents the brutality that still lingers in the hearts of World War II veterans and Holocaust survivors and their families isn't going to bring peace to the American public as a whole. Maybe Reagan and Kohl will become friends — but Reagan is betraying the wishes and feelings of the American people.

Pro-life view not always extreme

Editor

I have never thought of myself as an extremist, but according to the San Francisco Chronicle, I'm dead wrong.

He labels all those who believe abortion is wrong for society, and not just the individual, as such. You can also call me an extremist who comes to the murder of an adult, I don't believe that it is only wrong for me personally to murder, rather I believe it would be wrong for society to condone and murder and I am thankful that our society has laws against such a practice.

Screen is quoted as saying you can sacrifice the quality of life to improve the quality of someone else's life. He cites as an acceptable example of his statement the loss of 55 million lives during W.W.II. He draws a comparison between the allies choosing to send men to their deaths and a mother choosing to kill her child.

The deaths caused by the allies were not deaths because no one wanted those people. Most were the result of men and women fighting an evil and tragically losing their lives in the process.

The only deaths for the purpose of lessening the quality of one person to improve the quality of another was what we now refer to as the Holocaust.

U.S. should not promote strife

Reagan's terror, torture and extermination of the heroic defenses of Afghanistan is ignored while congress waves over deteriorating communist aggression in Nicaragua and El Salvador.

Students from UC Berkeley, Santa Barbara and Cal Poly, San Luis Obispo are vociferously protesting South African peaceful protest to maintain racial harmony and prosperity while murdering blacks and dominating nations of Africa is virtually ignored.

Rhodesia, a stable and prosperous country, was brought down and destroyed by world wide agitation. Under the terror, Robert Mugabe, a self-proclaimed Marxist-Leninist, the successor nation of Zimbabwe is a shamables.

The former government of Nicaragua is determined and betrayed by the Carter administration.

The connection between Nicaragua and Vietnam is a different situation in another part of the world.

But it's something the American people are supposed to watch on, because one thing is clear: the United States should never have to mark the tenth anniversary of a military action ever again.

Bowling alley forum next week

UNICEF campus program to benefit starving Africa

BY KRIE REHER
Staff Writer

Students, faculty and staff will have an opportunity to voice their opinions on the possible bowling alley remodeling plan in an open forum Thursday May 9 at 3 p.m. in the University Union.

The forum, in Room 220 will address both sides of the remodeling plan that was proposed last quarter as a result of financial difficulties facing the bowling program in the University Union games area.

Roger Conway, executive director of the U.U. said income projections of the bowling alley show a $20,900 deficit for the year. In addition, overall usage by the student body has declined and league participation is down 60 percent from 1981.

Conway said the reconstruction plan, if approved, would move the recreational sports program in the bowling alley for a temporary five-year period. The area would be divided into four quarters. One assigned to a multimedia studio for dance, aerobics and martial arts, a weight training facility, office space and the last quarter for storage space for this program and other program areas in the U.U.

Conway feels it is important for students to express their feelings on a project of this magnitude, "We've tried to give as much publicity as possible to raise different arguments," Conway said. "Most of the arguments have been from people who are currently involved in bowling."

Student input is essential in the research of the bowling alley remodeling plan. Conway said. A telephone survey by a marketing student was developed and recently implemented to see how a random selection of students felt on the subject.

"If the board decides to allocate the space to Rec Sports, we plan to use as much in house resources such as student designers and students from construction and engineering programs," Conway said.

However, if the decision is to keep the bowling alley facilities, Conway said the U.U. will be supportive. "If the decision of the board would be to keep bowling, we'd promote it as best as possible."

"Most of the arguments have been different arguments," Conway said. "The forum, in Room 220, will address students to express their feelings on the subject."

UNICEF campus program allows students to help save the world's children.

In response to continued starvation in famine-stricken parts of Africa, the U.S. Committee for the United Nations Children's fund is starting a new national student leadership program.

"UNICEF is one of the leading agencies in Africa," said Stephen Kinnaird who coordinates the Campus Ambassador program, under which the campus Ambassador program falls.

Last year, UNICEF spent $222 million in emergency relief aid and another $120 million on long term development. Long term development assistance is the "most necessary thing in permanent reversal of this crisis," said Kinnaird.

The Campus Ambassador program is a "spanking new program" and is "a new tact as far as campus organization goes," said Kinnaird. "We're very much in the building stages."

The Campus Ambassador program allows students to help save the world's children while developing marketable proof of their leadership, managerial and communications skills within a national program, said Dr. P. Bernard Phillips, acting president of the U.S. Committee for UNICEF.

Under the program, a Campus Ambassador would be a student who organizes fundraising and awareness activities on campus through various student organizations.

"The main thing we're looking for is a point-man or point-woman to get the word out to all the other clubs and organizations on campus," said Kinnaird. They need people who like to work with other people and someone for people involved.

Students interested in learning more about the Campus Ambassador program can contact Kinnaird at his New York office by calling (212) 886-5522.

FINANCIAL AID SURVEYED

The Financial Aid Office is conducting a survey to evaluate the quality of Financial Aid services available to Cal Poly students. Two thousand Cal Poly full-time students, both undergraduate and graduate, have been randomly selected from the registrar's roster to participate in this survey.

The extensive survey will ask students to rate the caliper of the Financial Aid Office staff, including receptionists, counselors, work-study technicians, scholarship staff, Guaranteed Student Loan staff, Pell Grant consultant and Peer Counselors. An evaluation of financial aid media exposure and the effectiveness of Cal Poly financial aid publications is also requested of students completing the survey.

Students are also asked to respond to survey questions concerning the operation of a Financial Aid Office. Sample questions include: "Did the reception staff keep the line moving as quickly as possible?"

"Did the Financial aid counselors spend an adequate amount of time addressing your concerns?"

Suggestions for changes and general comments are encouraged from students completing this survey, as the Financial Aid Office Team is dedicated to efficient student service, and promoting student development.

Students selected to participate in this worthwhile effort will be sent a Survey form and a postage-paid return envelope to the Financial Aid Office. All individual responses will remain anonymous. Results of this survey should be available sometime during Fall Quarter 1985. Any questions regarding this Financial Aid Survey should be directed to Julia Waller in the Financial Aid Office, Administration Bldg 212 from 10:00 am to 3:00 pm everyday.

Poly to host CFFA Leadership Conference

1,100 will descend on Cal Poly

By LYNETTE FREDIANI

More than 1,100 Future Farmers of America high school students are expected to attend the 57th State FFA Leadership Conference May 6 to 7 at Cal Poly.

The Collegiate FFA and the Agricultural Education Department have the primary responsibility of coordinating the convention.

"There are 150 students in CFFA who put on the convention," said Glen R. Casey, assistant professor of Agricultural Education and faculty coordinator of the event. "But there are other students who may have been in FFA in high school and are not now agriculture majors or members of CFFA that help out with the convention."

Senior Agricultural Education major Don Borges is the student chairman of the convention. He was not a member of the FFA in high school, but is a member of CFFA and was co-chairman of the event in 1984. "I became involved with the state FFA convention because of my major and my involvement in CFFA," said Borges.

Borges receives three units of college credit in Agricultural Education 220X for his role as convention chairman. "The most difficult job as chairman is communications," said Borges. "I have to make sure there are no loose ends and everything flows smoothly. If there is a breakdown in communication, those responsible for specific aspects of the convention may misinterpret their responsibilities."

The state convention serves as a positive public relations event for recruitment of Cal Poly students, according to Casey. "Although there may be minor inconveniences from the number of students attending the convention such as long lines, the convention is completely positive for Cal Poly," said Casey. "Not only do we recruit agricultural majors, but other FFA members who come to Cal Poly and enroll in majors unrelated to agriculture."

The FFA state convention has become a tradition at Cal Poly. "The third annual convention began the legacy of Cal Poly as host," said Casey. "Cal Poly has been the home of the FFA state convention for almost all the years the state convention has been held," said Casey. "They've bent over backwards to be my fourth convention, and I've experienced no problems," said Casey.

Borges agreed. "There are tight regulations and curfews. The FFA members are not given any leniency or free time to be able to cause problems," said Borges.

Casey said the organization for this year's convention began in Fall Quarter 1984. "Our major strategy meetings are conducted during Winter Quarter, but the majority of the work begins now," said Casey. He added that planning is already underway for next year's convention.

Some students have even found the FFA convention a good topic for a senior project while others receive class credit. "The book we're using to run the convention is someone's senior project," said Casey.

The state convention has been held in Chumash Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. in Chumash...

"We've had a fantastic response from the university and the community," said Casey. "They've bent over backwards for us."

The large number of high school students on the Cal Poly campus has caused no problems at past conventions. "This will be my fourth convention, and I've experienced no problems," said Casey.

Three witty men turned the Chumash Auditorium into a comedy club comparable to those in major cities, providing a steady flow of laughter for two shows of over 800 people each.

Close to the stage, and a definite crowd-pleaser, was San Luis Obispo's Comic Shoppe II, which was a success, and a definite crowd-pleaser.

Half way through his act he pulled off his sweatshirt to expose a "Star Trek" uniform. His many impressions of Star Trek, starting with Captain Kirk and moving to the rest of the crew kept the audience in stitches for the rest of his act.

His real talent was displayed when the music meant to accompany his singing didn't come on queue.

McGillen opened the show talking about everything from San Luis Obispo to sex to "organic" people. He was dressed casually wearing jeans and a sweatshirt.

"I'm just doing an individual routine with the show," McGillen later explained. "This is the way I've always done it."

Next on stage was Kare Odis, who talked about some of the differences between people from Chicago and those from Los Angeles. He demonstrated how each speaks and drives differently. He said that drivers in Los Angeles feel that it is OK to drive through a red light as long as they saw the light when it turned green.

The crowd was most responsive to his discussion of digital alarm clocks. Odis said that it sometimes takes him all night to set his alarm and he also feels that snooze alarms should be outlawed.

McGillen came back out to introduce the main act of the evening. Kevin Nealon. McGillen informed the audience that he had a talk with the person in charge of the musical accompaniment and with encouragement of the audience he decided to bring back Jack Nicholson's "Every Breath You Take." Other unlikely stars such as Johnny Cash, Peter Lorre, Jimmy Stewart and Neil Young joined in as well.

Kevin Nealon just couldn't wait to get on stage and kept poking his head out of the curtains.

Nealon started his act talking about the many choices that people must make and gave some gross examples of difficult decisions. Throughout his entire act he kept changing his mind about the message that he was trying to get across. The crowd started to predict this and shouted in unison, "That's what I'm really trying to say here."

While Nealon was talking he would often pause and wait for a shout from the enthusiastic audience to finish whatever he was talking about.

Nealon finished up his act by posing as a street artist and painting a comical picture of a volunteer from the audience. As he adjusted her head to paint the picture, he "accidentally" rubbed charcoal all over her face. The volunteer was, to say the least, extremely surprised when she saw herself in a mirror, much to the delight of the audience.

Tom McGillen, Kevin Nealon, and Cary Odis appeared, each doing an individual routine with improvisation.

McGillen even found time to poke fun at the "Aggies" at Cal Poly—especially about their 4-wheel drive trucks.

About half way through his act he pulled off his sweatshirt to expose a "Star Trek" uniform. His many impressions of Star Trek, starting with Captain Kirk and moving to the rest of the crew kept the audience in stitches for the rest of his act.

Chicken brings luck, Mustangs win

By JANET HASEROT

Staff Writer

Amidst a weekend of Poly/Royal celebrations, the Cal Poly baseball team had its own party.

The San Diego chicken entertained the fans while the players came back from a 2-4 deficit to win the game 6-4 over UC Riverside on Friday. Mustang Bob Wright walked in the ninth and was brought home by Mark Gambardella a single and Jason Mass's walk.

A 4-4 tie in the bottom of the tenth brought up Craig Johnson who was hit by a pitch enabling the winning run to get on base. Two walks followed and the "Mustangs were home free."

Saturday's doubleheader was split with the Mustangs taking the second game. After being victimized in the first game, allowing Riverside to earn 12 runs, the Mustangs turned the tables on their advantage as they were able to hold on to a 10-9 win in game two.

The split gave the series to the Mustangs three games to two, keeping the Mustang record at an even 25-25.

The big innings that Cal Poly is experiencing is attributed to a lack of pitching depth.

"The lack of pitching depth will create high scoring," said head coach Steve McFarland. "Four of our five top pitchers are out for the rest of the season."

The win in game two typified the baseball program. "We have the ability to beat people in high scoring games. We can come back on people."

The wins over the weekend were exciting for the team, but more than that was the entertainment on Friday night. Ted Giannoulas, the chicken, performed his antics leaving an impression in the stands far and above any ever left before. The "Shake Baby Shake" show included a premiere performance by Mark Crabtree, a 7 month old Santa Maria boy. While the music played over the intercom, the chicken shook the life out of Kyle.

An eighth inning break consisted of a doctor act in which the chicken gave an eye test to an umpire.

The chicken moved closer and closer until the chart was directly in front of the umpires face.

"I felt that it was alot of work for myself and Mark Bersano to bring the chicken here, said Coach McFarland. "But it was successful and added excitement to the baseball program."

The chicken advertised that he has a 70-30 ratio for hometown wins. He came through for Poly.

Los Angeles Lakers Coach Pat Riley tried to find something positive to say about the Portland Trail Blazers.

"After all, they were supposed to lose two games down here," Riley said Tuesday night after the Lakers rolled to their second split-side victory, 97-94, over the Trail Blazers in their National Basketball Association playoffs.

"Now they're going to go back home, get that tough home crowd, and I know they'll be more confident," he predicted.

"This thing will get tougher, I guarantee you."

The victory gave the streaking Lakers a 2-0 edge in the best-of-seven Western Conference semifinals, and they could wrap it up with wins Friday night and Sunday afternoon in Portland.

The Lakers have won their last 11 games, including the end of the regular season, a one-sided sweep of the opening playoff series against Phoenix, and the two easy triumphs over the Trail Blazers.

"I'm tremendously satisfied with the way we're playing," Riley said. "The point spread isn't significant, we are winning basketball and that's all that counts."

"We'll have to be sharper in Portland. They play very well at home."

Sharpshooting guard Byron Scott, in just his second NBA season, paced the Lakers with 31 points against the Trail Blazers. That included 10 in a four-minute span of the second quarter when the Lakers broke the game open with a 21-1 string that gave them a 62-41 advantage.

"We played bad," Lasorda said of the Dodgers, whose streak of scoreless innings reached 19 before they spoiled Andujar's shutout bid in the ninth. "That's the first ballgame this year that we've played bad."

Andujar struck out four and walked two. The only run Andujar allowed was a one-out homer in the ninth by Terry Whitfield, his first of the year. Jerry Reuss, 1-3, took the loss.

The Cardinals, who ended a four-game losing string, scored in the second inning when they loaded the bases on singles by Willie McGee and Tom Nieto around a walk to Terry Pendleton. Ozzie Smith followed with a hard shot to center that Reuss fielded but then threw wide to first for an error, allowing McGee to score.

The Cards keep their last four-game winning streak going with a comeback victory, 134-118, over the Portland Trail Blazers.
