Loan defaults at 4.9 percent

By DAWN YOSHITAKE

Cal Poly has the lowest default rate in 2985 of all the California State Universities for paying back guaranteed student loans.

Commercial Director Larry Wolf said Cal Poly has a 4.9 percent default rate as of March 31 for the $3,800 to 4,000 loans given to students annually.

The guaranteed student loans are given to students the university saw as the most likely to do feature stories on anything in the county, said Henri Harbe, a junior broadcast journalism student.

"It has been a big challenge," Harbe said about organizing the news, but he also noted that it is exciting to try and know what it is like to work in the real world.

He added that the default rate may be low because of Cal Poly's two professional collectors who are more responsible and recognize their obligations.

The student paying back the loan is paying for the next student," said Wolf in explaining the NDLS program.

Of the $900 to $1,000 loans given through the NDLS program annually, the default rate for this year is 5.03 percent.

"We have a good student," Wolf said. "They are able to ride the bus free."

The maximum penalty for a misdemeanor crime is one year in jail and a $1,000 fine, or 90 days in jail and a $1,000 fine.

The busing service, De Laney said, hopes will be approved before Summer Quarter. Right now we're waiting on a definite dollar amount from SLO Transit and a tentative contract, he said.

Free busing may become reality

By KRIS REHER

The proposal is to come from a fund called Parking Fine Recovery.

Scott De Laney, Administrative Coordinator, said the committee has been working on free busing since winter and the chances are good the proposal will go through.

This year there has been a lot of talk in the Student Senate and the Administrative Committee about the parking problem, De Laney said. "And I became aware of at least one other campus. I believe it's Davis, where they are able to ride the bus free.

De Laney said he presented his proposal to SLO Transit Coordinator. Nancy Knoller who was very interested in working out a program for Cal Poly. "There's benefits for them," De Laney said, "because there's a guaranteed input and they wouldn't have to worry about the bus tokens.

To provide a free busing service at Cal Poly, De Laney said it would cost between $40,000 and $50,000 a year, not including Summer Quarter.

Although there is $40,000 in the fund for next year, De Laney has some concerns the popularity of the service may create a need for expansion.

The only major concerns that were expressed related to what happens if the service really takes off," De Laney said. "Will they need more buses, money. It's only that limited amount of money in the fund.

The busing service, De Laney hopes will be approved before Summer Quarter. Right now we're waiting on a definite dollar amount from SLO Transit and a tentative contract," he said.

I'd like to see a contract signed before graduation," said De Laney.

KCPR to broadcast all-news format today

By Michael Stump

KCPR radio will broadcast ten hours of news today to give broadcast journalism students an idea of what it is like to work at an all-news radio station.

The eighth annual Newsday consists of all-news broadcasting from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Students have the opportunity to do feature stories on anything in the county, said Henri Harbe, a junior broadcast journalism student and executive producer of Newsday 1985. They can cover personalities, local issues and human interest stories.

"Because the community of San Luis Obispo does not provide enough local news to take up ten hours of air-time, much of the news will be national and international," said Harbe.

With the assistance of Cal Poly journalism alumni who work at radio and television stations throughout the country, the students have been researching times and interviewing people.

"I'd like to see a contract signed before graduation," said De Laney.

Former Poly athlete enters guilty plea

By DAWN YOSHITAKE

A former Cal Poly football student was a member of the Detroit Lions, pleaded guilty Monday to a misdemeanor charge of malicious mischief after he was arrested last month for cutting a man's hair.

"I've made a mistake," said Robbie Martin, 26, also known as "Brooks," a professional wrestler. "I'm really sorry about this." He pleaded no contest to a misdemeanor charge of assault with a deadly weapon.

The maximum penalty for a misdemeanor charge is one year in jail and a $1,000 fine.

De Laney said the approximate total of the fund for next year is $40,000.

Although there is $40,000 in the fund for next year, De Laney has some concerns the popularity of the service may create a need for expansion.

The only major concerns that were expressed related to what happens if the service really takes off," De Laney said. "Will they need more buses, money. It's only that limited amount of money in the fund.

I'd like to see a contract signed before graduation," said De Laney.

KCPR disc jockey, Dana Sano, practices her broadcasting technique prior to the all-news Newday special presentation today from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Cal Poly, 900 kHz, has been called disgustingly efficient, he said.

Creation debate mediator unfair
Editor

They gathered together. The event was a debate, scientific cold war. It was about the evolution. The believers in the Establishment quaffed their guidelesssplendor. The creator was thrust on their side as the mediator introduced the speaker and with devout impetuousness spit an accidental expletive.

Praise the lord! She quickly and humbly apologized as an apostate as she had said it. With her remorse, she managed to quash any potential Hillbilly or Amens yearning to emit from the theater. She seemed well-chosen for the benevolent facilitation in the dispersal of the truth. This was a battle of creation. With creator like kindness, she would periodically, buy her frame of mind across the stage. Her mission was to add the vegetable creator Dr. Gish by moaning the microphone too closely.

Through these lips issued forth that very factual matter that the creator had intended to communicate. Perhaps these lips had been haphazardly guided through the realm of higher education, and over the field of biochemical try. It was from this mouth that we received the oratory, as a cathedra. With a creator-like kindness all his own, Dr. Gish reframed from confusing his layman audience.

Cynthia wondered as she sat in their right minded presence. This was a normal enough occurrence, since she was of that heretical caste who took upon themselves to indulge in the luxuries of critical speculation. Cynthia mostly categorized this phenomenon no further than into the nomenclature, interpreting and questioning her. Then she proceeded to do so. Why would a person embark upon a journey into an intellectual banality, and blatant antithesis of their own uniqueness? How is it that an individual comes to consciously embrace a paired package and accumulated dogma of their own victory? Once this heat is accomplished, there is a long line waiting to join the horde of such generally swallowed humans? Is the right to sanctimoniously categorize oneself with the non-questioning horde come cheap?

Perhaps after having lived in a world, riddled with sin and heresy, the individual grew weary of the tail and climbed on to the paragon with Dr. Gish and the mediator. Their reasons for membership to the sect were more than likely the benefits of access to unique systems of logic. For example, gaps in the evolutionary theory provide for Dr. Gish’s evidence that its opposite must be true. Therefore, if one answer is perfectly insufficient to the right thing, then it is to defy one’s opinion on the basis of logic. Regardless of its validity? That’s the true and right way. Just remember that succinct ideas preferably stereotypic in nature function best. Furthermore, please keep your questions simple. Creator forbid, should you be left groping for answers.

So now you’ll stay a belief in the creator’s system. Choosing not to perform mundane rituals upon my own benefaction, I do embrace this with a vehemence that resonates me I am all the more demanding. I do not have boundaries around my thoughts, emotions, and sensory perceptions.

I would welcome derogatory discourse upon myetch for doubting from those in the ranks with Dr. Gish and the mediator. I could elicit no praise more divine.

Statewide statistics and impact estimates show that Pell Grant, SEOG, NDSL, GSL and Cal Grant financial aid programs would be greatly affected, burdening thousands of students with extra financial worries. This academic year 154,947 students statewide received Pell Grants, 1,638,564 students received SEOG, NDSL and GSL, and 69,260 students received Cal Grants. The California Postsecondary Education Commission projects that with the cuts the number of recipients would be reduced to 139,405 receiving $104,855,419.

Attending California State University campuses, 91,000 students now rely on financial aid. Forty-five thousand depend on Pell Grants and 43,000 depend on Cal Grants. Locally, Cal Poly students would be losing $6,200,000 in loans alone, and 163 Pell Grants would be taken away. Total, 1,100 Cal Poly students would be affected.

Reagan made concessions once on this issue, and the issue is far from being decided. There is hope for us yet. Van Ginkel apparently urged the subcommittee to continue soliciting student input on an alternate approach — and higher student fees. Dr. Van Ginkel said it well on Monday when he said, “Congress must remind the President, and the nation, that a well-educated citizenry is the best defense. I urge you to defend, renew and preserve our nation’s commitment to a well-educated nation through strong student assistance programs.”

Our voices continue to be heard. We would like to be told by their employer that they must subscribe to a certain health care plan, like it or not regardless of what our students’ affluence demands. The opportunity to choose their own health care plan, why should we not get a chance to decide together what is best for us. A new outlook on man’s debate question of card
Reader states:
Editor

I am concerned about the power of mandatory health cards for all. I believe this proposal, if passed by our state legislature, would give people the right to choose a physician or medical care center of their choice. Such a plan would go far in lowering the prices to consider paying additional fees over any above those proposed fees that would be required by the Health Center in order to visit a physician or health center outside of Cal Poly.

There are many local residents who are not employed and already have established medical facilities they can patronize. In addition, many have private health care insurance of their own, or are a dependent on a health care insurance policy of the parents. For these folks, prolonged increase in annual ration would be a wash of money. I wonder how state employees like Dr. James Nash and those who are proponents of this mandatory be like, and they would be told by their employer that they must subscribe to a certain health care plan, like it or not regardless of what our students’ affluence demands. The opportunity to choose their own health care plan, why should we not get a chance to decide together what is best for us.
Liberal takes to categorizing

Editor:
I don't understand why you printed Jim Austin's lengthy and pointless letter. It was pure hate and made no attempt to deal with any issue or question.

Let me respond in kind, then I am a born citizen, a reasonably good student, a taxpayer and a liberal Democrat. I am proud to be associated with those Americans who broke the corrupt business monopolies of the 1920's, who fought for safe drugs and food, and who support the elderly and handicapped, civil rights, clean air and public parks.

I am as confident in my opinions as Mr. Austin is in his — more so, in fact, because I enjoy talking issues with informed conservatives and don't feel threatened by them.

Liberals have done a vast amount of good for this nation and world, and we will continue to do so. Unfortunately, it has become fashionable to bash liberals in the 1980's. This is primarily because we have a smiling president who has successfully convinced this nation that liberals were solely responsible for the frightening inflation of the 1970's. Ronald Reagan inherited a worldwide oil glut that took much of the inflationary pressure off our economy, and the past few years have seen a corresponding resurgence in the economy.

Reagan blames liberal deficit spending for inflation ("We'll never go back to the Red Old Days") but is unable to explain why, at the present moment, the government is spending more meaningless money than it ever has before, yet inflation is at a 20-year low. I invite Mr. Austin to explain this.

It is time for liberal America to crawl out from under the rocks we have been calling conservativism, "irrelevant" or "impotent" because they have gone after social programs. It is time for us to use more accurate terminology, such as "ripoff" to describe his attitude towards the future. After all, Reagan's hard-earned deficit is going to end up in the lap of some Democratic administration.

Because people are such baffling creatures, I am reluctant to fit them into categories. In light of Mr. Austin's challenge, however, I will make a special effort.

I hereby declare a file: Reagan Youth. This is a new category that goes above and beyond mere informed conservatism. Reagan Youth are not merely content to change the world — they want to run it, and they're happy to destroy anyone who gets in their way. A typical adolescent male Reagan Youth dresses in contemporary pastels and his hair is cut stylishly short. Not quite short enough for the military, but short enough so that when we invade Nicaragua, his hair can be cut to military specifications at a moment's notice, fairly bubbling with supply-side propaganda. Bill Buckley's latest novel was written with the same style and vigor.

I feel threatened by them.

McKim was a victim of liberal, unadorned excess. I feel sorry for Mr. Austin. I don't understand why you published the rebuttal. The use of language is at a 20-year low. I invite you to proper this.

Debate not very gentlemanly

Editor:
At this point in my life, I am neither an evolutionist nor a creationist and hearing about last Saturday's debate dealing with the origin of man sparked some interest in me so I decided to attend. Upon entering the gym, I found a large audience eager to hear the controversial question battled out by two gentlemen who are Ph.D.'s in their respective professions. Well, as it turned out only one of the two, Dr. Gish, proved to be a gentleman.

Dr. McKim is definitely of another "kind." McKim's initial argument and rebuttals were loaded with personal insults directed at Gish that had absolutely no bearing on the issue at hand. These remarks tended not to discredit Dr. Gish but rather to make McKim look like the village idiot.

It is a shame that McKim could not control his abrasive behavior and conduct himself in a more professional manner. I am sure McKim had the facts and figures to adequately support his position yet his obnoxious attitude mangled what might have been an interesting speech, which in turn would have made the debate more civil.

By DAN RUTHMEYER

A fiery crash and the threat of possible legal troubles have taken a back seat to education as use of the Cal Poly airstrip has increased over the past several years.

Closed in 1974 by Cal Poly President Robert E. Kennedy, the airstrip, which was once said to be a hazard, has now taken a prominent role in the training of aeronautical engineers.

Constructed in 1938, the airstrip has undergone a renovation which included leveling it off, clearing rocks and planting grass.

With these improvements to the airstrip, the Aeronautical Engineering Department hopes to again utilize what it considers an important part of its teaching methods.

"I think it has a significant effect on students being able to gain hands-on training," said Dorai Sandlin, Aeronautical Engineering Department head.

The 2,000-foot dirt and grass airstrip has recently been used for individual student projects and for class laboratories.

Sandlin explained that the airstrip is valuable in the class setting because students can plan and evaluate tests conducted on the department's Cessna 150. All planes taking off...

The closing of the airstrip as a Federal Aviation Administration approved landing site brought with it limitations to what the department could use it for.

Lifting many of the limitations and bringing the airstrip back into prominence was the work of former Aeronautical Engineering Department Head John Nicolaides.

In closing the airstrip, President Kennedy said he was not trying to hamper the education of Cal Poly students, but was trying to limit the number of privately-owned planes allowed to land.

“We closed the airstrip in 1974 because there was a considerable amount of use that was uncontrolled,” Kennedy said in a recent interview.

Kennedy pointed out that since the airstrip was on a map used by private pilots, it invited those who may not be familiar with its subtleties.

“I had a concern that the use of the airport by private pilots who don’t normally use it may cause unnecessary accidents,” said Kennedy.

In talking about the problems of private pilots, Kennedy referred to several possible dangers involving the airstrip.

The biggest concern of Kennedy’s administration was the fact that the landing pattern brings planes over the school at low altitudes. Kennedy also said that down-drafts from Poly Canyon have always caused trouble for pilots.

Also adding to the closing of the airstrip was the question of liability. Kennedy felt that if private pilots crashed on the airstrip they could bring suit against the university because of the dangers associated with it.

In removing the use of the airstrip, the current administration under Warren Baker has reevaluated the concern over liability and has decided to allow the airstrip to be used more often.

Although the airstrip remains off maps used by private pilots, it is open to those who gain prior university approval. By doing this, the university can control who has the right to land.

Take my meal card — please!

For years, there's been a myth circulating among dorm residents that the food at Vista Grande is better than the food at the dining hall. Don't believe it. The food doesn't really taste any better there, they just dim the lights so you can't see the stuff you're eating.

Vista Grande is a lazy man's dream. You just leave your dishes on the table when you're done and walk out. Then some guy with a cart comes by and picks them up. I have a roommate who ate at Vista Grande when he lived in the dorms. After dinner he leaves his dirty dishes on the table and waits for the dish fairy to clean them up.

At the dining hall, they ask you to bus your own dishes. Fine. I'd like to bus mine to Cleveland. If you don't clear your dishes after a meal in the dining hall they send a security guard after you. Thank God those guys don't carry weapons. It would be hard to explain to your roommate's mother that he'd been shot for forgetting his tray on the table.

It's things like security guards which make the dining hall a lot more fun than Vista Grande. VG is where you go to serve your girlfriend a nice quiet dinner. The dining hall is where you go with half of Muir Hall. Where else can you watch an ice cream cone and chocolate custard vanilla on helpless people night after night? Where else can you take a handful of green jello, take a snorer and let it drip through your fingers?

The problem with the dining hall is there hasn't been a major food fight in years. Let's face it, the place could use a little redecorating and I'm not taking napkin fights either. I'm talking full-scale, all-out global thermosnaker war. Just kidding. Seriously though, things have got to liven up a little in there. I mean people make a big fuss about someone breaking a dish. Big deal, the guys in the dish room are getting paid to do it. No, what the dining hall really needs is a few more gravy stains to match the curtains.

Entertainment aside, the food is what has really made the dining hall famous. It's really quite simple to tell if they are serving something good or not. All you have to do is apply the Rod Snapper Principle. The size of the hummingbird has inversely proportional to the quality of the meal. If your thumb is larger than six people are in the hamburger line, it's a sure bet they're serving red snapper again.

I'm not trying to imply that the food in the dining hall is bad, but after eating there I wonder why we blame the chemical companies for poisoning America. I took the Mexican platter to the physics lab one day and they told me it had a half-life of two to three weeks. I've had chocolate cake which was so dry you could soak up a glass of milk with it. I think it was some type of sponge cake. But it's not all the cook's fault. You try and make a good meal out of stuff that comes in five gallon industrial strength containers.

Honestly, the people at the dining hall really do try to make the meals edible. For awhile, they started putting parsley on everyone's plates. It was supposed to make the plate more appetizing. Now it they could only find a way to make the food more appetizing. A lot of people complained that they didn't want that much money for white parsley. I laughed — I knew I'd seen his type at least one thing on my plate.

DORM FOOD

My all-time favorite meal at the dining hall was pepper steak. Unlike other dining hall classics, pepper steak was actually edible and if you were hungry enough might even taste good. But what made pepper steak such a great meal was what happened after you ate it. Tell about volatile, a plateful of pepper steak was guaranteed to produce at least six hours of continuous belching. Rumor had it that one of the cooks was moonlighting as a pharmacist and was using the pepper steak to test his formula for time-release gas bubbles. Speaking of research, recent tests indicate that dining hall food is the leading cause of the chronic disease, FBS (Poly Butt Syndrome). If you ever get bored on a Saturday night, you can always eat at the dining hall there. I've heard they even spray starch than a Chinese laundry.

The most underrated meal at the dining hall is breakfast. A lot of people like to pick up a quick bite at the Snack Bar or Sandwich Plant. They don't realize they're missing a chance to ponder one of life's great mysteries: will the scrambled eggs be green or gray this morning? One of the first things you learn about having breakfast in the dining hall is that you have to get there early before the Cap'n Crunch runs out. That also gives you a chance to watch people stick their arms into the Fruit Loops to retrieve the secret decoder at the bottom of the box. And if that isn't enough to keep you occupied, you can always contemplate why the Housing Department requires all dorm residents to eat on campus. I think it's a conspiracy to keep dormites too weak to rebel.

Andy Frokjar is a senior journalism major and was recently sentenced to three to five years in Tenaya Hall for burning his meal card.

Reconciliation term fails, Osmond files for divorce

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Singer Marie Osmond filed for divorce Tuesday from her husband, Steve Craig, following a six-month separation and the failure of reconciliation attempts.

Miss Osmond, 25, is seeking $1 per year alimony, reasonable child support and custody of the couple's son, 2-year-old Stephen James Craig.

The filing came six months after the couple separated and then embarked on a reconciliation period, said Osmond family spokesman Ron Clark.

Miss Osmond and Craig, 28, a former Brigham Young University basketball player, were married on June 26, 1982, in a highly publicized ceremony at the Salt Lake Temple of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The 1 ½-page divorce complaint also asked the court to decide how the couple's property should be divided if Ms. Osmond and Craig were unable to reach an agreement.

The couple had made their home in Los Angeles after their wedding. Clark said Ms. Osmond has been living in the Provo area with her son since the separation.

Ms. Osmond; the only girl in the singing Osmond family, earned fame at the age of 13 with the hit song "Paper Roses," and starred with her brother Donny Osmond, on television's "Donny and Marie Show" during the early 1970s.

If a picture is worth a thousand words, eight art students will give viewers a mouthful to digest at a photography display at the Kennedy Library beginning next week.

"A Thousand Words," featuring a variety of portraits, abstracts, microphotography and more, will be the first permanent photography display on the first floor underneath the stairs.

The public is invited to an opening reception for the exhibit from 7 to 9 p.m. on Monday.

Helen Kelley, photography option faculty coordinator of the Art Department, said students in Art 406, a special problems course, "will display both black and white and color images that they have produced."

"We're excited, because we've been trying to get display space in the library for two or three years and the location we have is good," she said.

Photography option faculty will rotate the exhibit quarterly to feature works by students in various photography courses.

"Students were given the freedom to decide what they wanted to put up, so the display deals with a wide variety of subject matter. We feel the display is taking a step forward in visual communication. pictures can communicate in a universal language," said Kelley.

Junior art major David Diehl said students are displaying about four works each. His contributions are two black and white portraits of friends and two still life photos.

Diehl said that students are happy about the opportunity. "I think the department has deserved and needed a permanent display space for a long time now," he said.

Planning for future of Los Angeles

What Los Angeles will look like in the next century will be discussed Thursday by that city's chief planner for the last 21 years.

Los Angeles Planning Director Calvin Hamilton will talk about Metro rail, downtown revitalization and other metropolitan problems at 8 p.m. in the ground floor Gallery of the Architecture and Environmental Design building.

Hamilton directs a staff of more than 200 planners, architects and landscape architects in handling the variety of environmental design issues facing the area.

The lecture is sponsored by the City and Regional Planning and Landscape Architecture departments. The public is invited and a $1 donation will be requested at the door.

Hamilton and economics professor David Dowell of UC Berkeley will comprise a planning colloquium panel discussing development issues at 11 a.m. Thursday for a city and regional planning class.

Men win league

Attitude: it helps bring tracksters title and more national qualifiers

BY KIM MILLER

The Mustangs' new attitude not only meant winning performances for the men's track team Saturday, but also a conference championship.

Winning their new yellow T-shirts with the slogan "Attitude--it helps bring tracksters to the top," the Mustangs pulled off a conference championship Saturday, but also a conference title and more national qualifiers.

The Mustangs finished in and 14:39.1 respectively. A disappointed Chris Craig tripped near the beginning of the race, missing out on a chance to qualify for the national competition to be held May 24-25.

Sprints, vaulters and distance runners all agreed their commitment to winning the conference was engrossing. Some of the distance runners cut their hair into flattops after Coach Tom Henderson jokingly suggested they display their spirit in a visible fashion.

"Several people came up to me and complimented us on our team spirit," said 1,500 runner Chuck Fanter. Fanter placed third overall, 3:51.09, but first for the team in the metric mile McCarthy and Hernandez swept four of the top five scores.

Griffiths won the race in 14:39.1 while Jones and McCarthy finished third in 14:36.8 and 14:39.1 respectively.

Joe Frazier
Planning comeback at age of 41
'It's a fight,' he says of next bout

BY HAL BUCK
AP Staff

Joe Frazier's voice was thick, almost syrupy, but not quite as bulky as his body.

"I'm 236 now," the former heavyweight champion of the world said. "I'll be 219 for the fight." The fight? What fight? Certainly Joe Frazier wasn't considering another fight, not at age 41, not after the depressing comeback draw against Jumbo Cummings 3½ years ago.

Joe's son, Marvis, was asked about his pop's plans.

"It's just an exhibition," Marvis Frazier said softly, making sure his words reached only selected ears.

"Ain't no exhibition," Joe Frazier roared. "It's a fight." Boxing is serious business to this man. Exhibitions are for artists, not fighters. And Joe Frazier still has the spirit and soul of a fighter, with a respect for the sport and its practitioners. The faint of heart need not apply and no one has ever accused Joe Frazier of being that.

The facts are these. On June 22, Frazier will be in a Montreal ring to face Robert Cleroux, 47, a journeyman Canadian heavyweight. They will fight eight rounds, each lasting two minutes, with the bout benefiting sickle cell anemia research.

"He wanted the two-minute rounds, not me," Frazier snarled. "Eight rounds, that's no problem." The fire still burns bright in Smokin' Joe, stoked by sons Marvis and Hector, nephews Rodney and Mark, and adopted sons Murray and Smokin' Bert Cooper, all boxers. "My boys, they got the bloodlines," Joe Frazier said.

Track and volleyball tournaments slated

Two tournaments are planned for this weekend that will give students a chance to take advantage of the spring sun.

An intramural track meet begins on Saturday, 10 a.m., said Dianna Cozzi, coordinator of special events.

This meet will have 11 events, including: 100 meters, 200, 400, 1000 meters hurdles, 400 relay, mile relay, mile run, two mile run, long jump, frisbee throw, and shot put.

The meet is sponsored by the Cal Poly Recreational Sports program.

The meet will be held at the Cal Poly track and is free to students and the public, said Cozzi.

There will also be prizes awarded.

On Sunday, a beach volleyball doubles tournament will be held out at Avila Beach, said Cozzi.

There will be men’s, women’s and coed divisions.

The cost is $8 per team which includes T-shirts. There will also be a raffle, prizes and free refreshments.

For more information on either of these tournaments, or to sign-up contact the Recreational Sports office, University Union 119A.

Mustang signed by 49ers

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) — The San Francisco 49ers announced Monday the signing of six free agents, including Cal Poly San Luis Obispo center Brian Moore.

The others: Steve Smith, offensive tackle from Pacific; Steve Villa, quarterback from Santa Clara; Shawn Rogers, running back from Cal-Davis; Reese Freeman, defensive tackle from Northern Colorado; Hassan Aboulhosn, punter from Northern Virginia Community College.

The 49ers, National Football League champions, will be looking at several free agents and recent draft picks at a mini-camp scheduled Friday through Sunday.

The 49ers, National Football League champions, will be looking at several free agents and recent draft picks at a mini-camp scheduled Friday through Sunday.
The Mustangs did not place in the discus, triple jump, long jump or javelin. In the shorter running events, the men scored points. Paul Hill took second in the 800 with a quick 2:10.62. But Hill was looking forward to nationals. He said that a lot of experienced runners will be at that competition.

Dave Johnson scored for Polyp in both the 110 high hurdles and the 400 intermediate hurdles. In the high hurdles, Johnson ran a 14.74 and a 52.78 in the 400 hurdles.

Johnson, who wears a T- rek hat nearly everywhere he goes, said that when the pressure is on and he knows he has to perform he puts his hat on backwards, sort of like shifting into overdrive. Erik Josephson has a different way of coping with the stress of competition. He runs fast. Josephson qualified for nationals and placed fourth in the 200 with a time of 21.60.

Josephson placed third in the 100, followed by teammate Chad Lamin. Their times were 10.88 and 10.89. But Josephson's day was not all joyes. He and Kevin Pratt dropped a baton in the short relay.

"Mentally that just smashes you," said Josephson. Kevin Pratt added that the short relay team is close and they don't want to disappoint the other two runners, Damon Shows and Steve Fisher. But Pratt redeemed himself in the mile relay.

The mile relay was the last event of the day, and though the Mustangs had a lead that could not prevent the men from winning, Henderson kept the pressure on.

Richard Batiste, who ran the anchor leg, said that they mentally prepared themselves for the fact the meet might be decided on the outcome of the relay. Batiste said it often does and although the race was decided in the last 100 meters a runner from Cal State Los Angeles beat Batiste, the relay team scored an additional eight points and the Mustangs walked away winners.
