Thursday from math office: second in two weeks

By JAN SPACUE

Computer equipment was stolen over the weekend from the Math Department Testing Office in Fisher Science Hall, making it the second theft in two weeks from the room.

Among the computer items taken were an Apple printer, a poser interface, a disc drive and software that are valued at $1,100, said Cal Poly Investigator Ray Berrett.

The first of the burglaries from the Testing Office was committed over the first weekend of May and involved the theft of a typewriter and dictaphone valued at $740.

Because there was no sign of forced entry into the room, Berrett said he believes that both burglaries were committed with the use of a key.

There were no signs of prying around the door or scratch marks around the lock that would lead us to believe the lock was picked, said Berrett. "The only way for them to have gotten in this door is with a key.

Fingerprints taken Monday from a computer monitor in the room failed to be of any use to police in determining who had committed the theft because the fingerprints weren't clear, said Berrett.

The printer interface that was stolen was taken from the inside of an Apple III computer. While the frame of the computer was left behind, said Berrett.

Martin Lang, math professor, said he believes that the reason why only the interface was stolen is that the computer itself doesn't have much worth.

"The computer is not new and it is not of any significant value," said Lang. "When Apple put this computer out it wasn't really popular and it didn't sell that well."

Having put the computer in the testing office on Friday, the Math Department was in the process of backing down the computer with a cable and et­ ing in identification with an electric pencil.

Lang said that while at the computer center, while packaging the computer, a student ran into the Math Department and told him that his group had just committed the theft.

The software that was taken didn't contain data, but did have computer programs and operating systems, said Lang.

The testing office is provided by the Math Department as a service to high schools that wish to have diagnostic tests available to students. It is provided to high school students to determine if they are taking the math courses that will meet their needs.

Food scarcity is a myth,
world hunger expert says

By SUSAN EDMONDSON

The myth that hunger is caused by scarcity is refuted by the work of Dr. Lappe, an expert in world hunger and author of "the Food Problem." Dr. Lappe

Daniel Sheppard, a Cal Poly graduate student, was interviewed about apartheid.

Apartheid is a system of forced segregation in South Africa that was established by the white South African government in 1948. The system is based on racial discrimination, with blacks being forced to live in segregated areas called "bantustans.

The issue of apartheid is the topic of a debate that is being held at Cal Poly this week as part of a multicultural day sponsored by the student union.

The event was sponsored by the South African
Students Association and the
Cal Poly African
Students Council.

Congratulations to merit winners

Last week deans from all seven schools at Cal Poly approved $2,500 merit pay awards for 39 Cal Poly instructors. Although the Meritorious Performance and Professional Promise Awards program by the California State University system has been steeped in controversy from the beginning at both the state and local levels, we feel the Cal Poly instructors given the awards are to be congratulated.

Being an excellent instructor takes time, diligence and, most importantly, a dedication to the prosperous futures of thousands of students. Every student knows how a certain instructor can make a class come alive and the learning process a joy to behold that each student makes is most likely the result of plain hard work. The names of those instructors receiving the awards were published in Monday’s Mustang Daily, and we encourage all students to give those professors a heartfelt sign of appreciation.

We feel the ultimate selection processes used by the seven schools were fair and responsible, and we, especially, feel student input in the decision is at least most likely the result of plain hard work. The names of those instructors receiving the awards were published in Monday’s Mustang Daily, and we encourage all students to give those professors a heartfelt sign of appreciation.

Another hope of the Mustang Daily Editorial Board is that the instructors selected as merit award winners would funnel at least a portion of their money back to the education system. Cal Poly is broke. We can’t deny the temptation to spend the money on something a bit more fun, but seeing as how university funding is tight, putting a little back would be deserving of merit as well.

Daily stance on bowling wrong

Editor

It is a shame that the Mustang Daily Editorial Board would take such a stand on the bowling issue. For one thing, they are on the outside looking in, but they also have not examined the supply of evidence, and as a result, they have not been able to form any conclusion. We believe the evidence suggests the bowling alley is not the best use of the university's funds.

A lack of space forced us to make the decision. As it turned out, Dr. Gish (May 16) and J. Johnson (May 17) regarding the creation vs. evolution debate.

Pref responds to debate letter

Editor

I am writing in response to some of the points raised in the letters by Prof. Dougley (May 10) and J. Johnson (May 17) regarding the creation vs. evolution debate.

One feature shared by both letters is the daily barrage of negative arguments that overshadowed any of their ideas, his claims and his "creation model." In setting up the arrangements, I was given to understand by Dr. Gish that the ICR would debate in order "whether the theory of evolution is superior to the theory of special creation as an explanation for the scientific evidence related to origins." In a letter to Gish, Dr. Gish indicated that each of us would "present arguments on the basis of both positive and negative arguments."

Thus, it is the intent of both sides to defuse the controversy by presenting evidence related to origins. Let me ask, then, how can an argument be true or false when it is based on unverified evidence related to origins? Let me ask, then, how can an argument be true or false when it is based on unverified evidence related to origins?

Letter questions

Editor

Here is one more letter questioning the "right to dedicated time" for Jim Austin's "Romantic" or "Historical" class. According to Jon Ragland, defense of Austin's conduct is "the good Lord above" for keeping liberals out of the executive office, more power to him. Frankly, though, I think he should be thankful to our fading fathers for establishing a system of checks and balances, which ensures that the executive branch alone would not have the power to override the will of the people. As long as the intelligence of the people, the will of the people, is ready, willing and able to confound him. Oh, and there is one more thing, Mr. Austin. President terms of office are now limited to 2 terms. 6

Another argument used by the South African government is tribalism, said Taylor. "Tribalism is an effective policy tool which keeps various groups from developing national consciousness. By promoting tribalism, keeping African tribes separate and encouraging people to call themselves by their tribal name, South Africa adds another block to the apartheid regime.

In a South African brochure put out by the government, highlighting city-scapes, commerce areas, beach scenes and wide, expansive country, the only black people pictured are those dressed in native costume. "That's the image of blacks in South Africa the government would like you to have," said Taylor.

That is also why the creating of separate nations with their own governments for blacks in South Africa is not an improvement, but another step in promoting apartheid. "Setting up 'homelands' as states is South Africa's way of denying blacks political rights," said Taylor.

Roger Tobin, a member of Amnesty International, said the black workers are largely ignored by the press, allowing massive detention, police massacre and torture to escape international attention.

"It's impossible for these new 'states' to ever be self-sufficient on the improvised condition of the economy. Every black must still carry a pass book, which are viewed by most as badges of slavery," said Taylor. "Tens of thousands of blacks are arrested each year on pass law violations."

"Bishop Tutu's analogy of comparing South Africa to Nazi Germany is an accurate one," said Taylor. "In Nazi Germany similar pass book laws required Jewish citizens to carry one and present it on demand."

"For blacks, South Africa is still a terrorist state," said Taylor. "Signs remain telling blacks were to sit, stand, urinate, or 'wait' as in the airports. Despite severe punishment by the government for demonstrating, people opposed to apartheid continue to work for a free South Africa."

The African National Congress was created in 1912 when the British government outlawed in South Africa in 1960, and moved underground," said Taylor. "It's simply not true. The ANC predates the Russian Revolution."

Diamond has continued to collect material on apartheid and hopes to see Cal Poly make some steps to stop supporting the South African regime. "Bank's have power; banks like Citicorp provides loans to South Africa."

"I urge people to become informed. Talk about apartheid, take a class, read the newspapers. Write a letter to the El Corral Bookstore and tell them to stop selling IBM products," said Diamond. "IBM has been a major contributor to South Africa's industry."

"I can still remember the civil rights movement in this country," said Taylor. "And many of the arguments used back then are the same ones South Africa is using now - things like 'Blacks are content,' and it's only a few radicals causing trouble."

"It's obviously embarrassing to South Africa that there are demonstrations around the world and people are working to free South Africa. I agree it will take a revolution, but changes have got to be made," said Taylor.

"Over 300 people have been killed over the last few months," said Diamond. "If people are so happy with the system in South Africa, then why do they protest at such great risk?"

Sycamores and oaks flourish along the hillside. The redwood trees filled with steaming mineral water are nestled between the trees, adding to the relaxing setting at Sycamore Mineral Springs.

General Manager Steve Gregory said the tubes are surrounded by wooden decks and 100 acres of trees that provide privacy.

"I've been told we have one of the largest collections around for Sycamore trees," Gregory said. The 24 outdoor tubs seat from two to 50 people, he said. Gregory added that the largest tub, "El Grande," is 12 feet in diameter and holds 4,000 gallons of water.

"Our tubes have jets, so it's similar to a jacuzzi...the basic difference is you get a deeper soak when you sit in a hot tub. You're up to your neck in water, rather than just up to your shoulders," said Gregory.

Water for the Sycamore Mineral Springs was discovered in 1868 when an oil company hit a geyser while drilling for oil. Gregory said the geyser sprayed about 155,000 gallons of water per day and had to be capped.

About 6,000 to 8,000 gallons of water are pumped from the well each day, which is located on the resort's property. Gregory said a little heat is added to compensate for the water's heat loss as it's pumped from the water level eight feet below the ground.

"There are more springs around the property, but we don't utilize those," Gregory said.

The resort was established in 1897 with a large public mineral bath for its 200 boarders. Gregory said in the '30s, travellers from Los Angeles and San Francisco were transported to the resort and given room and board for only $4 a weekend.

A main building with Spanish architecture was added in 1935 and a staff was hired to perform medical therapy.

"I'm not sure how seriously the medical world took them," Gregory said. He added the staff would do treatments for asthma and arthritis.

The current owners bought the resort in 1978 and moved the tubs outside to take advantage of the serene setting, Gregory said.

"We also like redwood tubs outdoors because they're easier to maintain and are more durable," Gregory said. "They hold up to mineral water, which is corrosive."

Mineral water contains sulfur compounds, which is used as a natural disinfectant and magnesium, which is used for reducing stress, he said.

A hotel was built in 1980 featuring mineral water spas on each balcony, and Sycamore Mineral Springs is currently in the process of adding more changes.

The resort is re-modeling their pool, adding a new 6' x 6' unit structure to their hotel and will finish off their revisions with cottages and a restaurant.

Sycamore Mineral Springs is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week, Gregory said.

Cultural arts festival to be held Saturday

By LYNETTE FREDIANI

The first annual county cultural arts festival will be held Saturday, May 25 from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Mission Plaza in San Luis Obispo.

The San Luis Obispo Recreation Department and Cal Poly students enrolled in Recreation Administration 210 – Programming for Leisure – are organizing the event.

"Entertainment will include the Pat Jackson dancers, drama, theater and music groups such as the San Luis Jazz Band and the Morro Bay Whitescape," said Donna Dostalik, a physical education major enrolled in the course. "A variety of cultural events will be offered including arts and crafts, demonstrations on how to do different things and free blackjack," she added.

Carolyn B. Shank, associate professor of physical education and recreation administration, and Joan Ponzia, special events coordinator for the San Luis Obispo Recreation Department, thought of the idea for the cultural arts festival.

"We thought the idea would go over well in the county," Shank said. "We thought the idea would go over well — especially the campus clubs who could set up food booths for fundraisers."

By LYNETTE FREDIANI

The San Luis Obispo Recreation Department, thought of the idea for the event since no event of its kind exists in San Luis Obispo, said Ponzia. "The San Luis Obispo Recreation Department is supplying the minimal administrative costs and the entertainers are providing their services free of charge," Ponzia added.

"The purpose of the event is to promote county arts," said Dostalik. "We want to encourage everyone to come out and get involved — especially the campus clubs who could set up food booths for fundraisers."
Softball player named to All-American team

Four Mustangs get regional award, five named first team all-league.

BY LYNETTE FREDIANI

The Mustang softball team garnered a slew of post-season honors following its second place finish behind national champion Cal State Northridge in the California Collegiate Athletic Association.

On top of the list, leftfielder Ann Haut cow was named second team All-American.

"I believe this is our first softball player to be an All-American," said coach Denny Martindale.

Players receiving all-regional honors were: Keisha Gorman, catcher; Hancock; Rondie Hill, pitcher; and Lori Norcia, outfielder.

The awards were determined by votes from the coaches of the 13 teams in Cal Poly's region, said Martindale.

The Mustang team had a healthy makeup on the all-conference roster.

Cal Poly softballers garnering all-conference first team recognition were: Gorman, Hancock, Lisa Houk at shortstop, Hill, and designated hitter Carmen Johns.

Second baseman Susan Bertelsen, Norcia, and third baseman Angie Zoll were named to the all-conference second team.

Cal Poly, finishing second in the CCAC behind Northridge, advanced to the NCAA Division I regional playoffs.

The Mustangs met their first game, the Northridge Matadors, who went on to successfully defend their national championship.
