PE coaches at campus workshop

By Janet Haserot

Not the circus has come to town — but the 38th annual California Workshop for Physical Education and Athletic Coaching has. The 742 men and women on campus are not here just to play, outside all day. They have come to Cal Poly to learn.

"The intent is to provide professional development for teachers and coaches," said Steve Yoneda, committee member of the workshop and athletic trainer at Cal Poly. This year's workshop, which is sponsored by Cal Poly and the State Department of Education, has participants from all over the western U.S. and some from outside of the country.

Dick Villafarre, a physical education teacher from William M. Crocker Jr. High School in Hillsborough, is in his second year as workshop director. He says these teachers and coaches in educational programs that require them to "actually go out and practice what you talk about, and work up a sweat," said Yoneda.

"It's fantastic to have adults in your class that are interested in learning," said Pas Morgenau, a golf instructor from Vista, Calif. "We've had very favorable feedback from those who have attended, especially from the younger people who get to draw things from the more experienced." The classes range from the learning of the practical safety movement and flexibility to the usual baseball to the unusual pickelball (a game invented by a group of people who get to draw things from the more experienced).

Housing situation appears brighter for fall quarter

By Renee Shupe

Unlike years past, the student housing situation in San Luis Obispo looks promising for the upcoming academic year. According to Robert Bostrum, Cal Poly housing director, more than 1,000 new "bedspaces," have been added in various areas of the city since last fall.

"Although the dorms are basically full and we have started a waiting list, the off-campus picture looks much brighter than in the past," said Bostrum.

The newly-added 300 units at Mustang Village play a major role in the unusual abundance of space. According to Property Manager Tom Allen, over $10 million in construction costs have been devoted to the project. After completion in mid-August, there will be accommodations for an additional 620 student renters, boosting the overall capacity to 1,188. A total of 14 new two-bedroom units will have been added, which include 41 new two-bedroom units as well as 259 studios.

"The new additions will make Mustang one of the largest off-campus student housing complexes in the nation," added Allan.

Cedar Creek Village, the newest student condominium complex which burned down last winter, has been reconstructed and will house more than 340 renters in the fall. A total of 76 units have been built, all of which have two bedrooms and are completely furnished. The units can accommodate four persons each, and at this time the complex is almost totally filled.

The new housing alternatives have apparently affected some of the older off-campus facilities. Chris Becker, general manager of Stenner Glen, said "the abundance of housing has lowered occupancy," but he isn’t worried. "We have a cost edge," explained Becker. "We have kept our rents lower than other complexes, so I doubt that we will be affected for more than a year."

Prices vary at Stenner Glen depending upon accommodation, meal plan and payment plan. A shared room with 19 meals per week paid in advance costs $3,274.

Although no major remodeling has taken place at Stenner Glen, Becker said more than three times the usual amount of money is being spent on the regular summer renovations of repainting, adding new furniture and replacing drapes. He said this is partially to the new facilities that have become available. "A lot of it is just preventative maintenance," he said.

Like Stenner Glen, various room and meal plans are also available. A shared room with a 12-meal plan paid in advance costs $3,348 for the school year.

However, the rising availability of housing has not brought with it a substantial drop in rents. While Allen of Mustang

SLO City Council delays decision on People’s Kitchen

By Darcy Spangler

After hearing three hours of public testimony in a standing-room-only council chambers Tuesday night, the San Luis Obispo City Council was called to pass on an appeal by the People’s Kitchen for more room to operate.

A special meeting of the Council was called to consider the proposed housing situation of the People’s Kitchen from Mitchell Park. The proposed site borders San Luis Creek near the intersection of South Higuera streets. A 600-square foot building that exists on the property would be used for storage of donated food and clothing. The area is zoned service-commercial, with about 13 homes, a church and businesses surrounding the lot.

A motion by Councilmember Glenda Dorothea to deny the People’s Kitchen a use permit was passed with a 3-2 vote, with Councilmembers Dorothea, Danzig and Billig in favor of the motion.

Opposing the motion, Councilmembers Robert Griffin and Allen K. Settle agreed that all other alternatives for location of the People’s Kitchen had been exhausted and that the People’s Kitchen could serve as a condition for the service to operate.

"I'd like it to be a NIMBY situation, meaning not in my backyard," said Mayor Melanie Billig. "I don't think it's People's Kitchen's role in the community to be in this area."

She denied the denial of the permit on a concern of traffic and circulation problems on Brook Street and the health and safety of the neighborhood.

How would you balance the federal budget?

By Stacey Her bert and Deanna Morris

With Congress deadlocked over the fiscal 1988 budget, certain members struggle to provide solutions to an awesome federal deficit running at $1.18 trillion.

Raise taxes? Cut Social Security? Reduce spending?

So the shrill cries, echoing off the gilded halls and marble floors of the Capitol.

All the while, the bloated, happy pig of the Pentagon roots for the money ripped off.

Army Secretary John Marsh Bell Helicopter Textron Inc.

Earlier this month, the Army formally disclosed the federal criminal investigation against Bell over allegations of overcharging and fraudulent billing for spare parts. A prosecutor for the case said $15 million is a very conservative estimate of the money ripped off.

The bloated, happy pig of the Pentagon roots in its trillion dollar slop.

immediately cut payments to the firm in half. Whereas Bell was taking in $13 million on the contract, now it will receive only $6.5 million—a month.

French charges from an accounting officer on the U.S.S. Kitty Hawk show that sloppy procedures and enforcement have allowed for hundreds of thousands of dollars to be wasted. To save the effort of moving supplies below decks, sailors allegedly just dump them overboard.

Taking advantage of the largesse and looseness in the system, someone on the ship had $15 silver ingot bars delivered—some of which were discovered during a drug bust. Although the aircraft carrier had no need or authorization for the silver, it was sent and stolen, anyway.

When you multiply this kind of waste, which is representative, times 700 ships in the Navy, you’ve located several billions more.

During my four-year stint in the Army, I witnessed hundreds of thousands of dollars being wasted or stolen. I can remember the 82nd Airborne Division going through its year-end ordnance extravaganza. For three days straight, the paratroopers fired off all their bullets, rockets, mortars, flares and bombs before a...

Reader disputes bowling claim

Editor — In the last issue of Summer Mustang, Roger Conway is quoted: "All research has shown that the majority of students really have no strong feeling about keeping the lanes." Yet, in the survey from his office which was strongly biased against bowling, more students chose bowling than Nonweight-bearing training or fitness studio (rock dance, aerobics, martial arts) or both put together. (Even though the survey questionnaire indicated that a fee increase of $1 per quarter would be required for bowling but no mention of money was made for any of the other eight choices, more students chose bowling.)

It is ridiculous to destroy the bowling alley, which would take half the floor space.

The Mid-State Fair: a growing event

By Margaret Barrett

The San Luis Obispo County Mid-State Fair, which began as a three-day event when county residents gathered to show their animals, has grown into a 12-day combination fair and entertainment center attracting more than 330,000 visitors each year.

Members of the Sixteenth Agricultural Association decided they wanted a county fair in the early 1900's, said Daryl Teshima, a fair media representative. They received funds and approval from Sacramento to hold the fair in Paso Robles in 1942. World War II prevented the fair from starting until 1946.

"Everyone cooperated to get this thing off the ground that first year," said Teshima.

Events at the first fair included livestock contests, crops and floral displays and exhibits of homemade goods such as quilts, jams and pies. Live entertainment was also offered.

More than 100 volunteers performed in what they called "The San Luis Obispo County Cavalcade Wild West Show." Local performers became actors and actresses, portraying cowboys, Indians, train robbers and dance hall girls. All events were held in circus tents placed on dirt lots.

Less than 20,000 people attended the first year. "The most amazing thing is the fair made money the first year. It is unusual for any county fair to be almost unheard of for a new fair to make money," said Teshima.

The fair, named to attract more visitors over the years, and popular with those who were attracted, Maynard Potter, who became general manager of the fair in 1948, initiated the idea of landscaping the fair grounds and building a water fountain inside the main entrance. When asked what his goals were when he took over as general manager, Potter said, "I just wanted to make it the biggest little fair anywhere."

Buck Owens was the main entertainment attraction in 1969, which marked the beginning of having well-known entertainers perform at the fair. "That year started the notion of having the fair during the day and the entertainment center at night," said Potter.

Under Potter's leadership, the San Luis Obispo County Fair grew in length from five days to 12 days in 1981; the same year "Mid-State Fair" was added to its name.

The statue "Blue Ribbon Dream" was unveiled at the press barbecue.

Fair statue depicts life

By Margaret Barrett

The Mid-State Fair press barbecue was highlighted last Thursday by the unveiling of a small-scale replica of the statue which will grace the fairgrounds entrance next year.

Mark Greenway designed "Blue Ribbon Dream," a bronze statue of a father with his daughter holding her blue ribbon-winning lamb.

"We wanted to make the community a lot more aware of art," said Greenway, a resident of Temescal.

Emily Chidlaw of Aesculapius was present for the unveiling. She and her husband bought the first statue at a cost of $1,000.

"My husband invested in the statue because we feel very strongly about Mark's career," said Chidlaw. She agreed with Johnson's description of the statue, "It's very close to our hearts."

Russ James, promotions and special events coordinator, announced that Ray Clark will perform a 40-minute concert before Kenny Rogers' appearance on August 9, adding to the $750,000 worth of grandstand entertainment. Tickets are still available for all concerts, said James.

"No matter where you are you will find something to equal it," he said.

In addition to the grandstand entertainment, over $150,000 worth of free entertainment will also be available at four locations, the Pepsi Frontier Stage, Budweiser Ponderosa Stage, 4 up Big Top Stage and Coors Entertainment Crane, said Johnson.

Changing the name of the fair attracted people who normally would not come to San Luis Obispo, Teshima said. Big-name entertainers such as Bill Cosby, Waylon Jennings, the Beach Boys, Lionel Richie and Kenny Rogers have all performed at the fair. Some of the entertainers appearing this year include HERY Lewis and the News, Air Supply, from Jones and Alabama.

The Mid-State Fair runs from August 7 to August 18.

THREE DAYS ONLY
By Lisa A. Houk

The homeless problem in San Luis Obispo is a political, social and economic one, with many forms of ongoing relief in every corner of the city. In one such corner, the Mitchell Park block is the location of the People's Kitchen. We serve a well-balanced meal to 30 to 35 people, 365 days a year, rain or shine," said Stan Matzen, the coordinator of volunteers for the People's Kitchen. At noon every day, the People's Kitchen sets up in the park with donated food and volunteers from all over San Luis Obispo to serve the men, women and children waiting in line for a good meal.

"About 85 percent to 90 percent of the people in line are single males," Matzen said. "Because food stamps are about all a single male can get, that's just not enough.

Most of the churches in San Luis Obispo are involved with the People's Kitchen by offering food and services every month. Tim Boyer, the director of youth ministry at the First Presbyterian Church of San Luis Obispo, said his youth group serves at the People's Kitchen at least once a month.

"We usually serve hot dogs, beans and some fries or pasta," Boyer said. "And while the kids serve, they learn first hand how a little sharing and caring can go a long way.

Boy said any donations of time or food are helpful, as his church also supplies free bread to the People's Kitchen whenever possible.

Cal Poly has donated its own share of vegetables, pigs, eggs and milk to the People's Kitchen, said Matzen, but the summer months seem like hard times until students return. Matzen encourages students to serve once in awhile at the People's Kitchen to gain the experience of helping out the community.

"Come observe one day at the People's Kitchen — see if it's something you could do," Matzen said. "Get a small group of friends together to decide on a balanced menu of food to serve."

August and September have many volunteer spaces to fill with many young and old people who want to serve. Matzen is in charge of filling up and in his minimal spare time he is constantly making and handing out used clothes, shoes and blankets to anybody who needs them and announcing any new jobs listed in the Telegram Tribune to people wanting to fill the need for food.

In dealing with all the volunteers at the People's Kitchen, Matzen said, "A little sharing and caring can go a long way. Boyer said any donations of time or food are helpful, as his were discussed by the council. Billings proposed to form a subcommittee consisting of two city councilmembers, staff and representatives from the People's Kitchen which would study alternative locations and resolve the issue in a timely manner. Discussion of the motion focused on the effectiveness of such a subcommittee and the changing role of the city from facilitator to leadership.

Dunin said he may reconsider his vote denying the use permit, and shortly after midnight, Boyer withdrew her motion and adjourned until Monday noon.

The city staff recommended the People's Kitchen be granted a use permit on a trial basis because no other appropriate site exists and the nature and character of the service can be implemented in a safe manner. Conditions of the permit provide for a review by staff in one year or sooner if many complaints are received.

For hours people lined up to give testimony for and against the People's Kitchen's move to Mitchell Park to Brook Street.

Residents of Brook Street opposed the move to their neighborhood claiming it would further increase congestion of the dead-end street and threaten the safety of the neighborhood which already has a transient population. Residents fear vandalism and other crimes would increase if the People's Kitchen was located on Brook Street.

"Zoning is not the issue, people living there now are the issue," said Richard Wagner, a Brook Street resident. He speculated that elderly women and families who reside on Brook Street could be threatened by an increased number of transients brought about by the People's Kitchen.

The People's Kitchen, a non-profit service providing food and other services to the needy, presently serves one meal a day to 35 to 45 people at Mitchell Park. Betty Nielsen, chair of the People's Kitchen board of directors, said the organization has made countless attempts to find alternative locations for the kitchen and has followed guidelines from the city concerning zoning. After a year-and-a-half search for locations, the Brook Street site was the best alternative to serving in the park, ratified Nielsen.

"The zoning is right, the price is affordable," Nielsen said, adding there is no evidence linking guests of the People's Kitchen with crime in the neighborhood.

The question of congested parking was addressed by Community Development Director Toby Ross who said the People's Kitchen is negotiating with the city for use of city property next to the site which would accommodate sufficient parking.

A representative from the City Parks and Recreation Department argued the People's Kitchen does not belong in a park setting where it has been operating without city approval for two years.

People who live near Mitchell Parks favored the move, complaining they haven't felt safe to walk the streets since the kitchen began serving there.

Although there was dispute as to the location of a People's Kitchen, most agreed that the service is necessary.
In San Luis Obispo City, 48 percent of the population in 19814 cannot afford, elderly or a county wants to give," Anderson said, "This is not the impression the official figures. The predictions for 1989 through 1992 are 45 percent of the city's own and the percentages are what we see." Anderson said the political climate of the city and the county is creating its own problem, because of the desire within the last six months to promote tourism. "If tourism in this area grows and grows, people are going to have the gall to want to stay here, and there will be no place for them to go," said Anderson.

A regular at the People's Kitchen enjoys a free lunch.

The biggest problem in this community has been one of public awareness, Anderson said, because a real fear exists of anyone who is homeless. Many added social situations burdening the homeless, such as being a single parent or adult, handicapped or disabled, elderly or a minor, are unknown or not recognized by the public.

Any one of these people who fall into these added social categories can at some point be homeless," said Anderson.

The San Luis Obispo County and Cities Area Planning and Coordinating Council has come out with some startling figures for 1984 and 1989 through 1992. In San Luis Obispo City, 48 percent of the population in 1984 were in the very low and other lower income levels. The predictions for 1989 through 1992 are 45 percent of the city and 42 percent of the county will fall into the very low and lower income brackets.

"This is not the impression the county wants to give," Anderson said. "But these official figures are the city's own and the percentages are what we see.''

Many people in San Luis Obispo already live in motels, Anderson said, and even by working 50 hours a week at a normal paying job, these people still get evicted for not paying the $195 or $225 every week for a room. A motel offers a quick root over the heads of a homeless mother and child because utilities are hooked up without the requirement of first and last month rent and deposit payments.

"The city council just didn't want to hear it," Anderson said, "But now I think they understand that there are people who live here, who need help too."
Old Country Deli victorious in cook-off

In search of a perfect barbecued rib

By Janet Haserot

It wasn't difficult to decide which rib was unique among the seven ribs available for tasting. The Old Country Deli rib had no sauce, just seasoning. It wasn't messy and it tasted like freshly-cooked meat.

"The Old Country Deli has the best beef on a stick," said David Stanley, a senior physical education major.

It wasn't difficult to decide which rib was unique among the seven ribs available for tasting. The Old Country Deli rib had no sauce, just seasoning. It wasn't messy and it tasted like freshly-cooked meat.

"The Old Country Deli has the best beef on a stick," said David Stanley, a senior physical education major.

"The Old Country Deli has the best beef on a stick," said David Stanley, a senior physical education major.

He wasn't the only one who felt that way. Old Country Deli won the People's Choice Rib Cook-Off Award for the second year in a row. The deli also placed first in the Judges Award competition and "we understand that it wasn't a real close," said Norm Egan, owner of the Old Country Deli. "But we're trying to be humble about it.

Not everyone agreed with the final decision. "The Assembly Line was the best," said Chere Lee of Fairbanks, Alaska. "It had more meat on it and it wasn't gristly.

Mike White, a local resident, saved his last three ribs so he could sit down and eat "a bunch at a time."

White said, "The Assembly Line is the best in the sauce category, but Sebastian's has better meat."

Not everyone liked Sebastian's ribs. "I didn't like it," said Tom Goodman of Atascadero. "I just sucked it down."

Dave Dodler, a senior landscape architecture major, also favored the Assembly Line. "I've never had Assembly Line ribs before. I was surprised how good they taste. The sauce is what makes it."

Rose Marchetti, a local resident, said, "I don't care for the sauces. I wish they would leave them off and let the natural barbecue flavor cook through."

"Old Country Deli is number one," said John Marchetti. "That's my favorite too," said Rose.

But others were not quite as pleased with the entire rib cook-off. "Nobody knew what was going on with the ribs and I didn't want to wait in line," said Paul Schwarm, a recent crop science graduate. "So I went and bought chicken instead."

But for those who enjoy ribs or just the freedom of choice, the rib cook-off was an evening to remember. "Rib eating is a toothpickin' occupation," said Robert Holley, an employee of the Cigar Factory.

P. Cameron of Los Osos said her husband Alan wasn't eating ribs because he lost part of a gold crown last time he was eating them. "I'm not a rib fan anyway," said Cameron. "I'd rather have a burger from Rhynos."

15th annual Mozart Festival scheduled to start Monday

By Janet HMarot

The 19th annual San Luis Obispo Mozart Festival will officially begin at noon Monday, July 29 in the Mission Plaza in San Luis Obispo. A variety of concerts will be performed featuring professional musicians from all over the United States.

MONDAY

The Amadeus Brass Quintet will begin performances on Monday in concert at 3 p.m., followed by strings, woodwind percussion, brass and vocal workshops throughout town. In the evening the Festival Prelude in the Cal Poly Theatre will begin at 8:15. It will be an evening with William Bolcom and Joan Morris.

TUESDAY

The orchestra concert will begin at 8:15 p.m. at the Cal Poly Theatre. Pianist Jeffrey Kahane will be featured. This is Kahane's second year with the Mozart Festival.

At 9 p.m. there will be a Candelight Concert at Mission San Miguel featuring the Los Angeles Guitar Quartet. The program will include works from Bach, Pink, Mozart, Whitney and Siegel.

WEDNESDAY

The Mendelssohn String Quartet will play in the Cal Poly Theatre performing works by Mozart. Shulamit Ran's String Quartet will also perform.

- The Mendelssohn String Quartet is the winner of the Young Concert Artists' International Auditions. The quartet serves as Quartet in Residence at New York's Hebrew Arts School and the summer Santa Fe Chamber Music Festival. Also playing Wednesday at 8:15 p.m. is the Miadi Wind Quintet. They are the resident quartet at the Idyllwild and Ojai Music Festivals. The show will be held at Trinity United Methodist Church in Los Osos.

Harvey Pichel's Saxophone Quartet will play at the Community Presbyterian Church in Cambria, bringing forth the music of Bach, Mozart and various works by Joplin, Glazunov, Debussy and Ravel. Each member of the quartet is a soloist in his own right and Pichel is considered to be the finest saxophonist and woodwind virtuoso performing today.

THURSDAY

- The Ear Opener Concert begins the festivities Thursday in the Cal Poly Theatre. At 8:15 Bolcom and Morris present an array of American musical history ranging from generations of popular music to music for the concert hall.

"This could be the most unique of all the concerts," said Clifton Swanson, director and conductor of the festival. "They play and sing a lot of American music and much of it is Bolcom's original work."

Two other concerts will be held simultaneously, both repeats of previous performances. The Mendelssohn String Quartet will perform at Trinity United Methodist Church in Los Osos, while the Miadi Wind Quintet will be at Trinity Lutheran Church in Paso Robles.

FRIDAY

The weekend welcomes a new style of music featuring the Festival Chamber Singers and Chamber Orchestra at 3 p.m. The main concert begins at 8:15 at Mission San Luis Obispo, while a piano recital will be performed by Jeffery Kahane in the Cal Poly Theatre.

Saturday night's Candelight Concert will be repeated at 9 p.m. at Mission San Miguel.

SATURDAY

All three of the performances on Saturday are repeats of earlier performances, featuring the Mission Concert, the Harvey Pichel Saxophone Quartet, and the Los Angeles Guitar Quartet.

SUNDAY

The final performance of the festival is the Orchestra Concert on Sunday in the Cal Poly Theatre. This will feature music of Mozart and Shostakovich. Jeffrey Kahane will be on piano. "A festival is a celebration and is supposed to be an upbeat thing where everybody gets involved," said Swanson. "I hope that the students and faculty of Cal Poly will get into the swing of things as the festival gets under way."

Revenue from the festival are for the benefit of the students and faculty of Cal Poly.
Budget discuss increase for Poly

By Julie Anne Lauer

Gov. George Deukmejian has signed a balanced $33.9 billion budget for 1985-86 which provides the California State University with a 9.1 percent increase to the General Fund. The increase includes an $86 million for employee pay increase and $13.3 million for new programs.

The support budget for the CSU provides an additional $3.1 million to prevent State University for increase by 4.6 percent. The final budget provides for a statewide mandatory fee of $111 for up to 6.0 units and $191 for 8 units.

HOUSING

Village claims that as far as renting it’s “as competitive as they come,” he also said the new private studios are going for $600 per month. Several have already been rented, he said.

The Cedar Grove condoms are priced at $225 per person for a shared room and so far the price does not seem to have scared renters off as only a few singles are still available. Additionally, Tropicana Village rents reportedly remain the same.

With all of the newly-constructed facilities, housing director Bosstrom expects that many students who have been forced to live out of town will now be able to come into the city.

SYMPOSIUM TO DISCUSS NUCLEAR ARMS

By Margaret Barnett

Students for Social Responsibility will sponsor a nuclear symposium on Wednesday, July 21 at 7:30 p.m. in the Santa Lucia Resident Hall main lounge to make new students aware of the nuclear arms race, said the president of the campus organization.

Charles Wolf said the two hour symposium will include speeches by three Cal Poly professors, a 20-minute videotape and, if time allows, a question-and-answer period. Although final plans have not been completed, a short survey of approximately 10 questions might also be circulated at the beginning of the symposium to test how knowledgeable those present are on the severest weapons, Wolf said.

"It's almost impossible to keep up," Wolf said. "There are too many (nuclear proponents) making it purposely confusing, loading it under all different organizations."

Stan Dunlop, a philosophy professor, will speak on the latest arms developments, including "Star Wars," the Strategic Defense Initiative. He will examine the arguments given by the proponents and by the opponents, Wolf said, and because he is a philosophy instructor, Dunlop will show the analysis used in the arguments given by the proponents.

Jean M. Leavitt, a philosophy teacher, will also speak on the effects of spending so much money on the nuclear arms race and its effects on society.

Michael Yoshimura, a biology teacher who also is active in a grassroots organization called Beyond War, the members of which believe war has become obsolete, will speak on the "utter futility" of using war as a conflict resolution, Wolf said.

"We have all these weapons and we have no way to solve conflict is ridiculous," he said.

A videotape titled "No Frames, No Boundaries" will be shown after the speakers' presentations. The tape consists of an Apollo 9 astronaut's recollections.

"While orbiting the earth..."
