West African adds international perspective to Poly

By Jennifer Kildee

A Fulbright scholar-in-residence from Togo, West Africa with a doctorate in economics is at Cal Poly to help add an international dimension to the general education curriculum.

Tchaboure Aymee Gogue, educated at the University of Montreal, will assist with the International Agricultural Development graduate program and the International Affairs and Development programs. Gogue will return to his post as dean of the School of Economics and Management at the University of Benin in Lome, Togo, when his residency here is finished in June.

This year, Gogue will be "working in the library, gathering literature on microeconomics, getting used to computers learning about Californians, the organization of the university and the administration of schools." In return, Gogue's main goal is to teach the students here about his homeland.

Some of the classes Gogue will lecture to this quarter include: The Geography of Hunger, Theories and Models of Agricultural Development, Science, Technology and Public Policy, and Politics of Global Survival. During the next two quarters he will be a principle lecturer in Humans Values in Agriculture.

Published internationally on agricultural economics in West Africa, Gogue has written books on microeconomics, theories and international economics, and has recently co-authored a book on development planning. He also has designed and evaluated rural development projects.

Compared to the education in Africa and Canada, "the education here is not as open to world studies — it's more centered on the United States. You don't study what's happening outside, except in some special cases," he said.

Gogue said he likes his apartment in Yosemite Hall because he has access to students in the lobby. His wife and four children are in Africa, but his wife may join him here in April.

An experienced scholar, Gogue was a Ford Foundation Fellow at the University of Montreal and received a short-term Fulbright fellowship for advanced research at Boston University in 1981. He has also held short-term lectureships in France, Holland and the Central Republic of Africa.

Shuttle arrives at base

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE (AFP) — The new space shuttle Atlantis glided out of orbit to a touchdown on a hard-packed sand runway at 10 a.m. after a four-day orbital shakedown cruise of the last of NASA's four-craft shuttle fleet.

An hour earlier, Bobko had fired braking rockets high above the Indian Ocean to drop Atlantis out of orbit and start it on its descent toward this air base in the Mojave Desert.

Mission Control lifted its curtain of secrecy to announce the successful firing of the two rockets and its permit live television coverage of the landing.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration broke three days of silence on the mission Sunday to give a 24-hour notice of the planned landing.

Mission Control said the astronauts had conducted a series of tests of systems aboard the new spacecraft and said Atlantis had been "ovoid throughout the mission."

The $1.1 billion Atlantis joins Columbia, Discovery and Challenger to complete NASA's shuttle fleet.

The main purpose of Atlantis' shakedown cruise was to launch two $100 million military satellites.

Neither NASA nor the Department of Defense would confirm that the satellites had been deployed, but reliable sources said they had been sent to their planned orbits 22,300 miles above the Earth.

The two spacecraft were ganged on a single rocket engine when they were erected Thursday from Atlantis' cargo bay, the sources said.

Catherine Pangborn, business administration, senior: I think it's a really good idea. I heard once that a police officer said he's never unbuckled a dead body from a car crash.

Jim Marquis, electronic engineering, junior: I wear a seatbelt because I think it's a good idea; it's better to be safe than sorry.

Rich Flower, architectural photo editor: I guess it's a good idea but I just ignore it.

Elen Landis, social sciences senior: I think it's really hard to enforce but it would also save a lot of needless fatalities. Nobody ever thinks they are going to be in an accident that day. My kid has to be in a safety seat and that should be made.

Comic Relief

More than 14 years ago, Pulitzer Prize-winning historian Margaret Coit Ellis began to write a book about Andrew Jackson's Presidency. Nearing the end of the project, she had mentioned to her teen-age granddaughter that she just about finished her book on Jackson. "Oh!" one of them replied. "Michael or Jesus?"

After we moved to Phoenix, I spent hours in the hot sun trying to acquire a tan. Then a woman in the supermarket asked me if I liked living in Arizona. "How could you tell that I'm not a native?" I inquired.

"You can tell newcomers by their beautiful tans," she replied. "The older residents have learned to stay inside, where it's cool."

The mother's fear that her young son was watching too much television was finally confirmed when she overheard him saying his prayers. "Bless Mommy and Daddy," the boy began, "and give us this day our heaven."
24 killed in Puerto Rican flood

PONCE, Puerto Rico (AP) — Heavy rains flooded a shan­ yonside and some units were called out in the southern section of the U.S. commonwealth. The National Weather Service predicted the heavy rains, which began Friday, would continue until early Tuesday. It said up to seven inches of rain fell within a 16-hour period in some areas.

It was horrible. The water came through and it took my father, my four brothers and my niece," Jose San­ tigo, a teenager, said sobbing.

Chain-reaction accident kills 8

SACRAMENTO (AP) — A quick-thinking truck driver jack­ knifed his rig to avoid crushing motorists in a massive chain­reaction smashup that killed eight people and injured more than 40 on a freeway shrouded in wildfire smoke, authorities said.

Motorists at the fiery Sunday pileup, which involved at least 31 vehicles, said more people might have been killed except for the split-second maneuver by 45-year-old truck driver Ken Lenhart, who lives in the Fultaire County town of Lindsay.

If he hadn't done what he did, I wouldn't be alive right now," said Phyllis Shibley said after the wreck.

Lenhart said he had never seen anything matching the carnage in 27 years of driving trucks.

LONDON (AP) — Police threatened on Monday to use tear gas to control a group of 500 street-ragers, after some of the worst urban violence in Britain since 1981. One policeman was stabbed, at least 223 others injured.

Notables
Kudos to the following Cal Poly faculty and students for their achievements:

Student achievement

□ Tyler Hammond — a junior studying dairy and political science, he has been named the recipient of a $500 National Alpha Zeta Scholarship for the 1985-86 school year. This scholarship is presented as a part of an annual scholarship program sponsored by the Alpha Zeta Foundation. This foundation is the charitable arm of the Professional Fraternity of Alpha Zeta, a professional service and honorary fraternity in agriculture. Hammond is one of 31 students from across the nation to receive an Alpha Zeta scholarship.

Faculty news

□ Edgar Beyer — a crop science professor, he visited alfalfa research plots in Utah and Nevada. His travel was arranged by the Farm Seed Research Corp.

□ Linda Nelson — a professor in the department of psychology and human development, she participated in a symposium, "Changing Attitudes Toward Nuclear War: Theoretical Concerns and Experimental Results," at the 93rd annual convention of the American Psychological Assn. in Los Angeles.

□ Barbara Weber — a home economics professor, she participated in a Home Economics Administrators Workshop at Texas Tech University.

Published professors

□ Merrill Gaines — a professor in the architecture department, he has been named to "The Model." A "Prescriptive Process to Substantive Architectural Form," published in "OZ," the journal of the Kansas State University College of Architecture and Design.

□ Harvey Lavenso — a graphic communications professor, he has published an article, "From McLuhan to Wilkes: Bridging the Technologies of Design, Print, and Telecommunications at Cal Poly," in the July/August issue of "The Prepress Bulletin."

□ Philip Petti Sr. — a professor in the animal sciences and industry department, he published two articles, "Genetic Variation in Shell Strength and its Relationship to Egg Size," and "Effects and Mechanism of Aflatoxin on Variation in Egg Shell Strength," both in the July issue of Poultry Science.

□ John Martin — a chemistry department professor, he is co-author of "Rate-Limiting Steps in the DNA Polymerase I Reaction Pathway. The article was published in Vol. 24, 1985 of "Biochemistry."

□ Steve Jenkins — an English professor, he has had two book reviews accepted by "Western American Literature," the quarterly of the Western Literature Association, published in Logan, Utah. The books are: James P. Ronda's "Lewis and Clark Among the Indians," a history; and Will Henry's "The Gates of the Mountains," a novel set in the Lewis and Clark expedition. The reviews will appear in future issues of the journal.

School news

□ All 10 Cal Poly engineering programs recently reviewed by the national body that oversees engineering education have won renewal of their accreditation.

The successful programs include eight in the School of Engineering and Technology plus one each in the School of Agriculture and Natural Resources Management and the School of Architecture and Environmental Design.

The newly reaccredited undergraduate programs include aeronautics, agricultural, architectural, civil, electrical, electronic, environmental, industrial, mechanical and metallurgical engineering.

Deadline for the Notables section is 1 p.m. Monday for Tuesday publication.

ROTC recognition

Four members of ROTC received awards at the six-week Camp Adventure '86 at Ft. Davis, Washington last Thursday. Recipients of the Advanced Camp Completion award are, from left, Mark Gasia, natural resources management; Alan J. Moore, political science; Michael Harris, civil engineering; and Dean Wassen, dairy science. Harris also received a Reconno Badge.

Some companies give recent graduates a fancy title and not much else.

At Applied Magnetics, we value your ingenuity. We give business and engineering graduates the opportunity to assume significant responsibility early in their career by placing them in a position to make key decisions that affect the way we do business.

If you are interested in learning more about Applied Magnetics, come to an information session at 7:00 p.m. in the Staff Dining Room B on Wednesday, October 16, 1985.

On-campus interviews will be conducted on October 29th.
Leisure classes aid in relaxation

By Karen Kramer

Leisure classes, offered this fall by Cal Poly Recreational Sports, promise to be both educational and relaxing.

Sign language, massage and hatha-yoga will give students the opportunity to learn new skills and forget about their required courses.

"These three classes are unique in that they incorporate learning into a leisure atmosphere," said Laura Barney, leisure class coordinator and senior recreation administration major.

"Besides, they are a great way to meet people."

All classes are taught by qualified instructors, many of whom are Cal Poly students. The classes begin this week, sign language meets on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. in Science E-29, hatha-yoga on Wednesdays from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. in PE 108 and the massage class gathers in the University Union in room 219 on Wednesdays from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m.

Those interested can sign-up in the recreational sports office, UU administration major.

"I t ' s such a beautiful way to relax and learn at the same time," said Jack Dyer, instructor and founder of the massage business called Tension Breaks, which has studied both massage and acupuncture. Dyer's business offers 15-minute "tension breaks" to individuals in their own offices.

"People can't just sit back and take notes," said Dyer. "It's going to be an active class."

Dyer's teaching experience includes three years as an instructor at a San Luis Obispo summer camp for the hearing impaired. Presently working as an instructor at C.L. Smith Elementary, Dyer hopes to emphasize both the expressive and receptive aspects of sign language in her class.

"It's such a beautiful way to learn," said Dyer. "I think there should be more of an opportunity for people to learn it."

Wednesday nights' massage classes show potential for both a relaxing and learning atmosphere. Jack Dyer, instructor and founder of his own massage business called Tension Breaks, has studied both massage and acupuncture. Dyer's business offers 15-minute "tension breaks" to individuals in their own offices.

"Jack will instruct the class not only on how to give a massage, but also will help you deal with stress. It's a great way to interact and be social," said Barney.

The final class, hatha-yoga, is more of a physical than spiritual approach to the art of yoga, said Barney. Hatha-yoga gets your mind off everything, giving your body a chance to slow down," said Barney. "Although it's not aerobic, it is a way to tone your body up through different exercises."

An instructor is still being sought for the hatha-yoga class.

Barney's signing experience is centered around a special events program is to attract all residents with physical disabilities, will be included in most of the special events and tournaments, said Sliger. If a tennis tournament will feature a round-robin schedule for the wheelchair athletes, and anyone interested in more information about OARS should contact Toodie Perry at the rec sports office.

"This quarter will allow everybody to get involved in a fun sports event," said Sliger. "Our events and tournaments will only be special if our participants can enjoy the light athletic competition and meet lots of new people."

Just allows us to pick the draws and let the participants know what time to show up."

The deadlines for this weekend's singles tennis tournament are Thursday and Wednesday so that the draw for the tournament can be picked and a schedule of matches can be posted in the recreational sports office window by Friday. Sign-ups are taking place from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the University Union plaza today and tomorrow and at the rec sports office till 4 p.m. Wednesday.

"Most of the entry fees are $5, except for the over-the-line tournament which is $5 a team, and the Halloween Fun Run which is $3 for students and $6 for others," said Sliger. "It's a good way to find out exact dates and fees for the special events and tournaments is to stop by the rec sports office or look for the flyers posted around campus. Matt Sullivan, a graphic artist, is designing the flyers for the rec sports department this quarter."

Also, the OARS (On Going Events in Recreation and Sports) program, which is open to all residents with physical disabilities, will be included in most of the special events and tournaments, said Sliger. If a tennis tournament will feature a round-robin schedule for the wheelchair athletes, and anyone interested in more information about OARS should contact Toodie Perry at the rec sports office.

"This quarter will allow everybody to get involved in a fun sports event," said Sliger. "Our events and tournaments will only be special if our participants can enjoy the light athletic competition and meet lots of new people."

The men's and women's cross country teams performed well at the Stanford Invitational Saturday, emerging from the tough competition with their perfect records slightly tarnished.

The men's team, racing in its best finish in four years at this meet, placed third behind Stanford University and the University of California, Irvine. By finishing third, the Mustang men remained unbeatable on the Division II level, as they overwhelmed their closest Division II rival by over 150 points.

Bruce Storms, Brent Griffiths and Jerry Hernandez led the Mustang pack, which also ran 12th, 14th and 16th respectively.

Racing without top runner Katy Manning, who was ill, the women's team struggled and finished fourth behind Stanford, University of California, Los Angeles and University of California, Berkeley.

The Lady Mustangs were led by junior Mary Lopez, who crossed the line in seventh place and Jill Ellingson, who finished in 14th spot.
Toodie Perry sees self-worth from her own wheelchair.

Toodie Perry, a member of the disabled population and a employee at Cal Poly, sees self-worth from her own wheelchair. She coordinates river rafting, wheelchair tennis, and other activities for the handicapped.

From her own wheelchair, Perry sees self-worth in her work. She works with students who are also disabled, and helps them find ways to overcome their disabilities.

Perry is involved in wheelchair tennis, an activity that helps her develop a sense of self-worth. She also works with students who are also disabled, and helps them find ways to overcome their disabilities.

Perry's work with disabled students has made her feel more open-minded. She has learned to appreciate the challenges that disabled people face, and to see them as individuals who have overcome obstacles.

Perry's work has made an important contribution to the handicapped community. She has helped to promote understanding and acceptance of disabled people, and has shown that they can contribute to society.

Perry's work with disabled students has also helped her to understand the importance of education. She is working towards a doctorate degree, and hopes to continue her education in the future.

Perry's story is an inspiration to others in the disabled community. Her determination to overcome obstacles and achieve her goals is a testament to the human spirit.

Perry's story is also a reminder that we all have something to contribute to society. Whatever our abilities or disabilities, we can all find ways to contribute to the world around us.
