Athletics referendum would up student fees

By Jennifer Smagula

On Nov. 4 and 5 students will vote on a referendum calling for a $4 student fee increase to help support athletic scholarships.

John Rembao, leading proponent of the athletics referendum, said that the referendum is backed by the Athletics Department and the Administration. He said, “Students can't continue to keep taking, they need to start giving something back to the institution.

"Everyone at this university needs to work together instead of putting the blame or brunt of the problem on someone else,” Rembao said. If the referendum passes, students, administrators and outside sponsors will all contribute to scholarship funding.

Pat Gibson, leading opponent for the referendum, said that the Administration has overlooked athletics fund-raising and administrators are “copping out by asking students to pay the bill for scholarships.

Gibson contended that there are professional consultants who specialize in fund-raising, and work with non-profit organizations to plan specific fund-raising programs. "The person President (Warren) Baker had appointed to do fund-raising resigned his position, and no one was rehired for the job. Now, the Administration simply wants to ask for the cash to supplement the fund-raising,” he said.

State employees affected

Salary limit to be proposed

By Gita Virmani

Limiting the salaries of state employees is the primary purpose of Proposition 61, the California Fair Pay Amendment.

Proposition 61 was initiated by Paul Gann, who co-drafted Proposition 13 for the 1978 ballot. Gann and his group, People's Advocate Inc., are the major backers of the measure.

Under Proposition 61:
□ The salary of the governor, scheduled to rise next year from $49,000 to $85,000, would be fixed at $80,000. Salaries of other constitutional officers would be set at $52,000.

CMC is overusing Poly may face water shortage

By Sandra Coffey

Water on campus may become a problem if the university's present supply is used up before a new source can be fully accessed, said a Cal Poly official.

Executive Dean Doug Gerard, who is also chairman of the Whale Rock Commission, said Cal Poly is one of three recipients of water from the Whale Rock Reservoir in Cayucos. The City of San Luis Obispo and California Men's Colony also receive an allotted amount of water from the reservoir.

The reservoir was developed in 1959 by the City of San Luis Obispo and the state Legislature, which funded the project to provide water to the three consumers, according to Gerard. The water in the reservoir was divided up into different amounts that the Whale Rock Commission felt best suited the recipients' needs.

The water is classified into two divisions: city water and state water. The city has its separate supply; Cal Poly and CMC's supply are state-allocated.

The Whale Rock Reservoir holds 40,000 acre feet of water and has a safe annual yield of 3,900 acre feet per year. One acre foot is equivalent to the amount of water needed to cover one acre of land one foot deep in water, which is about 330,000 gallons of water. The safe annual yield is the amount of water that can be used without drying up the reservoir by using too much water at any one time, Gerard said.

Since the safe annual yield limit was set and water limits were placed on the individual users, problems have developed for all three groups, Gerard said.

CMC has grown from a population of 2,400 to 7,000 inmates, and "all those prisoners drink water andflush toilets," Gerard said.

We all know that books burn — yet we have the greater knowledge that books cannot be killed by fire.

Jeff Mackenzie, engineering technology junior:

Always do what you think you should do. Also it's important to think of the person, not a machine. No, not at all. I'm more of a 'freshman':

No spirits, no partying. It's that Halloween time of course. It's that time for a good scare. And no one knows what the old master have put on paper if they speak a different language. It gets very frustrating.

Once upon a midnight dreary, while I pondered, weak and weary
Over many a quaint and curious volume of forgotten lore
As I read Newswear and Time, on every page there was a crime
And I shuddered at the thought of what Ron Reagan had in store
Just two more years till '88 for that aging dinosaur
Only this and nothing more.

Shombe Randall, electrical engineering freshman:

No. I just plain hate computers. Maybe it's because I don't fully understand them — they speak a different language. It gets very frustrating.

KM Solis, home economics freshman:

No, not at all. I'm more of a people person, not a machine person.

Politics doesn't belong in the Supreme Court

Editor — One of the issues on the Nov. 4 ballot is reconfirmation of six California Supreme Court justices. This seemingly simple procedure, designed to allow voters the ability to remove an incompetent individual from the high court, has become a hot political issue. At the heart of the issue are the judicial futures of Justices Rose Bird, Cruz Reynoso and Joseph Grodin. Unfortunately, their fates are being decided on the basis of their political affiliations, rather than how well they are doing their jobs.

The responsibility of the courts and the judiciary is to apply the laws of the land, regardless of the political ramifications. This duty sometimes places the court in the uncomfortable position of reaching a conclusion which, on moral grounds, it would prefer not to reach. Occasionally, the justices must reverse a lower court ruling, not because they feel the judgment was wrong, but because it was reached in an improper way. Unfortunately, many of these rulings involve murderers and other gross abusers of the law.

A careful reading of the decisions of the current court reveals that these justices are performing their assigned duties well. They are studying the law and applying it with reason and consistency. Whether we agree with their decisions should not be the issue; it is not the court's responsibility to reform law according to public sentiment. This is the job of the legislature.

It is important for Californians to consider carefully their reasons for voting for or against these justices. And when they are done reasoning, it is important that they cast their votes, for every vote is important to the preservation of our freedom.

Wowies the difference in football attendance

Editor — This is just a note of correction regarding the Oct. 27 column by Dan Ruthmeyer, "Everybody loves a winner." The Sept. 13 football game with Cal State Chico drew 4,200 Wowies and their parents. This game took place during the parents' program (the weekend before Wow). Tickets to the game were sold as a part of Wow. In addition, there was a pre-game barbecue. In other words, Dad footed the bill so that the whole family could have dinner and catch the game. Dad is so enthusiastic about these things. Bridget Parsons

Bird lags in reconfirmation poll

LOS ANGELES (AP) — State Supreme Court Justice Cruz Reynoso trails in his confirmation battle for the first time, while voters are closely divided on Justice Joseph Grodin, and Chief Justice Rose Bird continues to lag by nearly a 2-to-1 margin, according to a new statewide poll.

The KABC-Teichner Associates poll of 1,200 registered voters shows Reynoso with 20 percent in favor, 26 percent opposed, 33 percent of the voters saying they don't know how they'd vote, and 21 percent saying they never heard of him.

In Teichner's Oct. 8 survey, Reynoso had 19 percent in favor of his confirmation, 15 percent opposed, with 66 percent undecided or never heard of him.

Grodin, who narrowly led in the earlier survey, received 21 percent in favor, 24 percent opposed, 34 percent don't know, and 21 percent reporting they never heard of Grodin.

Bird, who has lagged in virtually every statewide opinion poll, continued to trail decisively, 29 percent in favor, 52 percent opposed, and 19 percent undecided.

Despite the extensive political advertising campaigns involving the justices, the majority of California voters are either undecided or simply have never heard of Grodin and Reynoso, according to Teichner.

Newsmen work to free colleague

WASHINGTON (AP) — A "Free Terry Anderson" petition drive has attracted the signatures of more than 1,200 journalists demanding freedom for the U.S. journalist and the other hostages in Lebanon.

The drive was launched three weeks ago by two Associated Press correspondents, the AP's chief Middle East correspondent, began circulating copies of the petition in New York, on the West Coast and, more recently, in foreign capitals.

One reporter gathered signatures at the recent superpower summit in Reykjavik, Iceland, and 135 newspaper editors signed it last week at the Associated Press Managing Editors convention in Cincinnati.

Scores of journalists signed the petition in Tokyo, where Anderson was once an officer of the Foreign Correspondents Club of Japan.

The petition asks President Reagan, Secretary of State George Shultz, their counterparts in the Middle East and others to work diligently for the speedy release of Anderson and the other prisoners.
Would be official state language

Prop. 63 concerns use of English

By Suzanne Carson

Proposition 63 is an initiative to amend the California State Constitution to declare that English is the official language of the state. The English language has never had any special status conferred upon it by the Constitution.

Proposition 63 provides guidance to the legislature, the governor and the courts in the protection and preservation of English. Its stipulations include:

- Passing no law that would ignore or diminish English.
- Issuing voting ballots and materials in English only (except where required by federal law).
- Ensuring that immigrants are taught English as quickly as health, safety and justice require.
- Weighing the effect of any proposed legislation on the role of English as the official language of the state.
- Allowing any California resident or person doing business in the state the legal right to use the state to enforce these provisions.

This amendment, proposed by Sen. S.I. Hayakawa, would have no effect on the costs and revenues of the state and local government services such as 911 emergency operators, public service announcements, schools and courts. They further contend that Proposition 63 would make the transition into American society more difficult, therefore discouraging the assimilation of new citizens.

One opponent of Proposition 63, California history and American social history professor James Gregory from UC Berkeley, says that Proposition 63 is just another in a long line of reactions against different ethnic groups.

"There's a real tradition here," Gregory said. "It seems to pop up every generation or so, as the demographic arrangement of California shifts and some new group appears. There's always a sizeable group that reacts, that worries the society cannot survive too much diversity." For these people, Gregory said, Proposition 63 becomes a symbol — not a real issue.

Cal Tech political scientist Bruce Cain disagreed at least in part with Gregory and the views of other opponents. Cain said that there may be some perceived elements of symbolic racist politics in Proposition 63, but it's a possible answer to the language problems in this state. "There are a lot of reasonable people out there who are worried about what's going to happen to California society if we have too many people who don't speak English; they have a genuine concern about whether the fabric of society can absorb so many new people," Cain said.

Councilor Vickerman. Proposition 63 would isolate non-English speaking persons from essential society more difficult, therefore making politics in Proposition 63, but it's a possible answer to the language problems in this state. "There are a lot of reasonable people out there who are worried about what's going to happen to California society if we have too many people who don't speak English; they have a genuine concern about whether the fabric of society can absorb so many new people," Cain said.

California elections

- Requiring that people function in English except where health, safety and justice require the use of other languages.
- Weighing the effect of any proposed legislation on the role of English as the official language of the state.
- Allowing any California resident or person doing business in the state the legal right to use the state to enforce these provisions.

Proposition 63 would prohibit the use of languages other than English in unofficial situations, such as family communications, religious ceremonies or private business. It also would not prohibit teaching foreign languages.

The 1 million signatures collected in order to put Proposition 63 on the ballot is indicative of public support, proponents say. It was the third largest number ever collected in order to put a proposition on the ballot.

Former student killed

By Elmer Ramos

A former Cal Poly student was killed Sunday when his car plunged off a cliff near Big Sur in Monterey County. Joseph Patrick Stephens, 24, was driving southbound on Highway 1 at approximately 3 p.m. when his car went off the cliff, said officer David Peelo of the California Highway Patrol. A body was recovered from the ocean below.

"There are a lot of reasonable people out there who are worried about what's going to happen to California society if we have too many people who don't speak English; they have a genuine concern about whether the fabric of society can absorb so many new people," Cain said.

The patrolman said Stephens' car was traveling about 30 mph when it swerved off the road and plunged down the 800-foot cliff. Stephens was ejected from the car about 150 feet from the top, and the car came to rest halfway down the cliff.

Stephens was from Los Altos and received a bachelor's degree in industrial arts in March. According to local sources, he had been admitted to the Cal Poly master's program in education, but did not register for fall quarter.

Tax reform will affect some students

Sweeping new tax reform, aimed primarily at easing the tax burden on the middle class, will also affect students by requiring portions of financial aid to be declared as taxable income.

Any financial aid, that is, money not required to be paid back, received in excess of tuition and course-related expenses must be added to students' taxable income when filing tax returns, according to Barry Toiv, legislative assistant to Congressman Leon E. Panetta (D-Carmel).

Under the new tax rules, signed into law by President Ronald Reagan last Thursday, course-related materials are defined as course-required fees, equipment, books and supplies. Any financial aid earmarked for room and board must be declared as taxable income, Toiv said. But if a scholarship or grant is less than the sum of tuition and course-related materials, the money can be used tax-free for room and board as long as it is not specifically designated for that purpose on financial aid applications.

Toiv said the provision will not prevent colleges and universities from offering grants and scholarships. "Frankly, what it may mean is that in some cases for a student to receive a grant, the college may have to offer more money for the student to end up with the same amount after taxes," he said.

"But that may be something some colleges and universities are not in a position to do." While the bulk of the tax law will take effect Jan. 1, 1987, the scholarship provision will not apply to any monies received prior to Aug. 17, 1986. Anything granted and used to pay for expenses between Aug. 17, 1986 and Jan 1, 1987 will also be treated under present law.

"One of the best things about this tax law is that it takes 6,500 million low-income people off the tax roles," Toiv said. "Low-income people, especially students, have gotten lower tax rates with this."

The tuition allowance for Cal Poly students is $707 per year, and book allowance is $384 per year, totaling $1,091. For a Cal Poly student, any financial aid over this amount is taxable.

According to Larry Wolf, director of Financial Aid at Cal Poly, approximately 10,000 students applied for financial aid last year, and between 5,000 and 6,000 students received some funds.

And even though 60 percent of Pell Grants offered exceed $1,100, Wolf said he doesn't expect a change in the number of financial aid applicants.

"The additional taxable income probably won't affect too many students because they don't usually make enough to put them over the non-taxable limit," he said.

Under the new tax law, single persons with taxable income less than $5,000 will not be subject to tax. Students who don't hold jobs and have expenses paid by parents will not have to pay taxes if they receive financial aid less than $5,000. Students holding average part-time, minimum wage jobs may earn $3,000 per year working 15 hours per week during school and 30 hours per week during the summer. Such students, if receiving $2,000 in financial aid, also would not be penalized under the new tax rules.

Students earning more than minimum wage, working, and requiring financial aid to make ends meet may face difficulty.

Although the new law may not cause financial problems for some students, "it will be something of a pain for students because they will have to show the money as taxable income." Wolf said. "Students will probably be calling here to find out how much money they received to include on their tax forms." He said there are no plans to issue forms similar to the W-2 to let each student know how much money they received.

Despite reassurances that the new provision will not constitute a tax burden for most students, the leaders of three higher education associations were quoted in The Chronicle of Higher Education as saying...

Stories by Pamela Varma, Staff Writer
The statement by the American Council on Education, the association of American Universities, and the National Association of Independent Colleges and universities pointed out a paradox: "It seems a strange interpretation of 'fairness' to create a situation in which an affluent student whose education is paid for by his or her parents has no tax liability while a needy student who finances school through a combination of summer and term-time jobs might not himself or herself pay taxes on a grant."

A censor is an expert in cutting remarks. A censor is a man who knows more than he thinks you ought to.
— Dr. Lawrence Peter, "Peter's Quotations: Ideas for Our Time."

"Don't join the book burners. Don't think of concealing thoughts by concealing evidence that they even existed."
— Dwight D. Eisenhower in a speech at Dartmouth College, June 14, 1953.

Ed Wilk, collection development coordinator for the library, said the display, which will be up through Nov. 4, is part of the efforts by the American Library Association to publicize censorship.

"The display seems to draw people," he said. "They stop, they look and read the captions. Some people are quite surprised at what's on the list."

Indeed, the twoc-ahaf page list of books censored, restricted or challenged in 1985-86 alone contains sufficient to imagine as being offensive.

Reasons most often cited for wanting the books removed from school libraries or placed on restricted shelves are that the subject matter is inappropriate for children of a particular age group, or that the book is blatantly pornographic. While possibly true for some selections, the question of abridging First Amendment freedom of expression rights is raised.

Other reasons for censored or restricted books include: "Are you there God? It's Me, Margaret!" by Judy Blume—because a parents group said it conveyed themes of sex and anti-Christian behavior—and "The Diary of Anne Frank," because four members of an Alabama state textbook committee said it is a "reel downer." Both of these instances took place in 1983.

Although it may seem a moot point to protest censorship of books in the "enlightened" 20th century, the library's display is actually timely.

Last Friday a federal judge in Tennessee ruled that a rural eastern Tennessee school district violated the constitutional rights of the children of seven fundamentalist Christian families by forcing them to read textbooks with selections from works offensive to their religious beliefs. Among the books they found offensive were "Cinderella" because it mentions magic, and "The Diary of Anne Frank" because in one passage Frank suggests that all religions are equal.

The children in that case will be allowed to excuse themselves from reading lessons in class and have their parents teach them to read at home. Wilk said he feels the judge's decision is ridiculous. Cal Poly English professor David Kann agreed. "I fear for the children," he said. "They are being intellectually neutered, not by being exposed to new stimuli."

Kann said that although he hasn't had any organized challenge of his assigned reading material in 20 years at Cal Poly, he said he has had an occasional student object to what they felt were anti-Christian elements in 20th century literature, but they were still held responsible for the material.

While teaching in Pasadena in 1965, Kann said he had a group of parents object to his assignment of "The Scarlet Letter" to his 10th grade American literature class because it discussed adultery. He said because the parents hadn't read the book they didn't realize the adultery doesn't take place in the book, and their fear was more out of ignorance than anything else. Despite the parents' objections, he said, "I taught what I wanted."

As for fears that something similar to the Tennessee case could occur here, Kann said "I would think at the university level it would be very difficult for such a thing to happen," although with the Accuracy in Academia organization supposedly on campus, he said he can't be sure.

While censorship of reading material seems to be requested primarily by Christian organizations, Lyle Porter, principal of Catholic high school Mission College Preparatory, said his school hasn't had any problems with censorship. In addition to the fact that the school's library is more of a reflex on than a library to find fiction works, he said, "We're not Tennessee."

Porter said Mission has an extensive philosophy as to what students study, adding that J.D. Salinger's "Catcher in the Rye" is prescribed reading. He said that unlike the parents in Tennessee, he has no problem with "The Diary of Anne Frank" because at Mission most important is a person's relationship with God and all religions are respected.

However, the librarian at Lighthouse Christian School in Arroyo Grande, which teaches kindergarten through 12th grade, said she reviews books before they can be placed in the library. Brenda Booker, who is also the pastor's wife, said she looks for high moral content, respect for persons which she said newer books don't have and educational value because "we want something that's not just for pleasure reading."

Booker explained that the library does not have any books by Judy Blume because Blume's books contain disrespect for parents and disobedience. "They (authors) want to write reality but we aren't so sure than that for our children to look up to," she said.

Booker did say her school's library contains "The Diary of Anne Frank," even though the book contains passages by Anne implying all religions are equal. Booker said that although she does not personally believe that all religions are equal, the book is a historical document and that with a good religious upbringing, a child will view his own religion as most important.

Minority affairs forum held to raise awareness

By Rod Santos

ASI held an open forum on minority relations at the university on Thursday night. Through brainstorming, tutoring and other activities the forum gives students the study skills and motivation they need to complete a post-secondary education. Last week, the program received $156,000 for the first segment of a second year grant from the U.S. Department of Education.

Another important step in increasing minority representation at the university is recruitment and admissions, according to Relations with Schools Officer Cindee Bennett-Thompson. "Recruitment procedures at Cal Poly are different from other schools because most majors are impacted, and we recruit from the whole state," said Thompson, explaining that schools such as Long Beach get up to 70 percent of their students from immediately surrounding areas.

Despite Cal Poly's new student rejection rate, recruitment is necessary because "we're trying to increase underrepresented students," said Thompson. "That ability begins at the university level."

One successful change he mentioned was the Upward Bound program, a program which helps underrepresented junior and senior high school students attend and find college. Through tutoring and other activities the project gives these students the study skills and motivation they need to complete a post-secondary education. Lady Mustangs upset eighth-ranked Cardinal

By Tim Robinson
Special to the Daily

It's starting to look like the Cal Poly women's volleyball team enjoys taking on the role of giant-killer. For the third time this year the Mustangs upset a top-10 opponent; this time it was a much larger Stanford squad that was upset in a see-saw affair, 15-7, 4-15, 15-6, 4-15, 15-12.

Stanford, who came into the game ranked No. 8 in the nation, had several six-footers on its team, but could not overpower the Mustangs' stubborn defense. They also had the unfortunate timing of facing Carol Tschasar, who played a run-of-the-mill All-American game with 17 kills and 21 digs. She, however, was not overly impressed with her own performance.

"I held my own out there, but I think I need to knock some more balls down... I think the team counts on me to do a good job and if I don't sometimes they seem to let up," said Tschasar.

The match, which upped the Mustangs' record to 18-9 and gave them an 8-6 series edge over the Cardinals, was the third big match in as many weeks. They have now beaten No. 1-ranked San Diego State and came within a home crowd's breath of beating San Jose, formerly ranked No. 2.

"I think on any given day that we certainly can play with anybody," said head coach Mike Wilton. He added that the Mustangs came close to beating current No. 2-ranked BYU in the third game of the season, but lost by two points in the fifth game of the match.

While the evidence that Cal Poly can play with any team in the country is plentiful, there should be an asterisk added to See VOLLEYBALL, page 11
HARter's Big Five Go For Big Wins Together

BY Chris Barks, Staff Writer

The Cal Poly women's cross country team has won the NCAA Division II Championship four years running. With a record like that, you'd think coach Lance Harter would be content to rest on his laurels. But nooooo ... Harter is looking forward to capturing this year's title with what he has dubbed "The Big Five."

In a cross country meet, each school will have an "A" team comprised of seven of its best runners in the race, along with a "B" team. Of these runners, only the top five finishers from each team will earn points for their school.

Although it is theoretically possible for a "B" team runner to beat an "A" team runner, it doesn't usually happen. This season, the top five positions have consistently been dominated by The Big Five.

The women who make up the nucleus of Harter's team are Glades Prieur, Katy Manning, Lori Lopez, Lesley White, and Kris Katterhagen. In addition to usually grabbing the top five spots on the Mustang team, these women tend to run as a pack, making it difficult for the top five finishers from each team to earn points for their school.

In any given race, any particular runner, as Harter puts it, "in any given race, any one of them could take the number one spot. They're that close."

As the season unfolded, Harter wasn't surprised as he watched his Mustangs repeatedly dominate their opponents. Working with these women over the past few years, he said, he was aware of their strengths and weaknesses, and of the tremendous potential they possessed.

"When recruiting and training," he said, "any time you're able to outguess the occurrence of stressful injuries or accidents, you're lucky." Harter's luck held out, and the fruits of the work he has done paid off.

For the summer, he said, most of his Mustangs walked away with first place. Manning finished first overall, setting a course record in the process, and three other members of The Big Five finished in the top 10.

The momentum continued with a win at the Aztec Invitational. White was the top Mustang finisher. The equality of the individual talent within The Big Five was illustrated in this race, with the women placing a close fourth, seventh, 12th, 15th and 16th.

At the Stanford Invitational, considered to be the premier cross country meet in the West, Harter's team finished in fourth place. Again, the Big Five ran in a fairly tight pack, with the difference in time between them totaling only 24 seconds. White was the first of the Lady Mustangs to cross the finish line, placing 14th overall.

Most recently, in the Cal Poly Invitational, the team finished in second place, with Prieur finishing first overall. In four meets, four of the Big Five have finished first for the Mustangs, said Harter. "We still have the CCAA championships this weekend, so that gives Kris a shot at the title."

On the women's team, the nucleus has been Harter's best runners. The team will earn points for their school, however, and the top five finishers from each team will earn points for their school.

The case. The Mustangs have a 11-2 record on their home floor, losing only to two top-ranked teams, and in the Stanford con­test an even stranger aspect of the home court advantage mate­rialized.

For the first four games, the team on the north side of the gym would win the game fairly handily and then lose on the south side.

With this geographical supremacy in mind, it wasn't surprising that the Mustangs won eight of their first 12 points in the fifth game, but had to change sides for the remainder of the match. They then proceeded to rob the jinx of any legitimacy by running up a 1-4-5 lead with an air-light defense, which had 117 digs on the night.

With only match point to go and the crowd of over 1,000 on their feet, the win over Stanford seemed a sure thing. However, superstitions died hard as Stan­ford won the next seven points to make it a sweep.

"We tried to sit on the lead and that was a big mistake," said Wilson, whose team suffered a heartbreaking loss to San Jose State during the weekend.

Cal Poly, which seems to be gaining momentum as the season progresses, probably had its best performance of the season on Tuesday. Vera Pendergast played her usually steady game with 13 kills and 12 digs.

Michelle Hansen added 17 kills and 17 digs, while Erin Deiters showed flashes of brilliance with her nine kills and 14 digs.

Claudia Pendergast added 45 sets and 19 digs, while Theresa Smith was named the conference's player of the week and a team-high 27 digs. The Mustangs' schedule gets no easier as they host Hawaii on both Monday and Tuesday.

For instance, he said, the team has gone through Division II teams and given them a run for their money. In fact, said Harper, "We probably hold our own in recogni­tion as a Division I power, because in Division II everyone just assumes we'll win, but with Division I, they say 'Oh yeah, how is Cal Poly doing?'"

As the Big Five head toward what they and the rest of the team hope will be another Divi­sion II championship, they are already looking toward next year. He said that while the five scoring positions have oscillated between The Big Five, three of those women are seniors. Harper anticipates that Carol Gleason and Sherri Minkler will move into position nicely come next fall.

As he put it, "The 1987 Cal Poly cross country team is already on campus, and with the young runners that we have..."

Jaye Johnson, freshman, said in her only appearance this season she would be "coming to catch up with my front crawl, and I'm optimistic that the Mustangs can continue their strong perfor­mances. This is probably the best team we've ever had," she said. "We've been able to do some things that we've never done before on the court."

PROP. 61

California elections

However, the savings could be outweighed by costs involving the proposal’s effect on governmental efficiency resulting from pay limits.

According to Vickerman, an important immediate and long-term effect of the initiative would be its impact on the ability to hire and retain qualified and experienced employees.

“People said Prop. 13 wouldn’t pass and it did, so I’m working hard to get rid of 61,” he said. “I’m afraid that non-state workers will vote against us. The average salary in California is $15,000 a year and to them $64,000 is just a dream.”

Ted Costa, an assistant to Gann, responded to this issue by saying that the People’s Advocate Inc. is only asking people who make less than $40,000 a year to vote for the measure, and that people who make more than that can do what they want.

In a Los Angeles Times poll conducted Oct. 11 to Oct. 15, 990 registered voters were asked how they would vote on Proposition 61. The results were: yes, 31 percent; no, 57 percent; undecided, 12 percent.

In September polls were closer, yes, 40 percent; no, 49 percent; undecided, 11 percent.

ASI asks for help in funding election

Student leaders requested that Cal Poly President Warren Baker give students $800 to pay expenses for the athletics referendum election to be held Nov. 4 and 5.

The referendum calls for a $4 student fee increase to help support athletic scholarships.

According to the ASI President Kevin Swanson, the money will be used to print the ballots and hire the League of Women voters to oversee the election.

The Student Senate requested that Swanson approach Baker for the money because of budget constraints.

Currently, the student government is running at a $100,000 deficit because of an increase in insurance costs which were not budgeted for, he said.

Swanson said the election was a difficult task of trying to get public support for the referendum. Currently, the student government is running at a $100,000 deficit because of an increase in insurance costs which were not budgeted for, he said.

Swanson said the election was not budgeted for last year because the task force researching the referendum had not come out with their recommendations to Baker in time to include the referendum in the budgeting process.

The money will come from the president’s discretionary account, said Swanson. In a memo, Howard West, associate executive vice president, requested that Al Amaral, executive director of the Foundation, send the money for the election to ASI right away. If the money is not received in time for the election, Swanson is confident the ASI Election Committee fund could cover costs if it is reimbursed.

“Asking for this money was not a conflict of interest, because it was to conduct the election and not pay for the information campaign; they are two different things,” Swanson said.

There are people and alumni out there who don’t know students are in need, Gibson said. “I have a friend who is an alumni making $40,000 a year. He lives in Arroyo Grande and has never been asked to contribute a dime,” he said.

The Administration is assuming that because they tried fund-raising once and it didn’t work, it will not work anymore, Gibson said. “These people are glowing over their efforts. They should seek a fund-raising consultant before they start taxing the students,” Gibson said.

If the referendum passes, students will have a majority of representation on the Athletic Advisory Commission, which makes decisions regarding allocations of Athletic Department funds, Rembao said.

According to Gibson, the Students are stuck in the middle of a university that is not willing to develop an adequate program. ASI has so far refused to take a public stand on the referendum.
