Private drug tests offered at local lab

By Jenny Lampman

With a rise in both marijuana use and employee drug testing, a San Luis Obispo doctor has devised a confidential mail-in marijuana urine test.

"We assist people concerned about the level of drugs in their bodies and also people concerned about being tested on the job," said Dr. Carl Johnson, the head of the TRI Institute lab. "Many said Dr. Carl Johnson, the head about being tested on the job," Johnson said. "We just want people to be aware that it does create problems physically and psychologically."

According to Johnson, some of the effects of marijuana include bronchitis, sinus infections, lung cancer, increased blood pressure, a lack in the ability to memorize, a decline in coordination and a loss of personal identity.

If the lab gets a positive result, Johnson said they will refer the client to drug information and rehabilitation clinics. Clients are required to sign a disclaimer stating that test results will not be used for anything other than personal information. The disclaimer also agrees that because TRI Institute Lab does not collect the urine specimen, it cannot prove that the client did not use marijuana after the test.

"All we can say is he came in here and he gave us a sample," Johnson said. The disclaimer is intended to avoid the possibility of TRI Institute Lab finding that a client tests negative, and that client using the test in his own defense when another test finds traces of marijuana use.

While the test cannot be used in court, Johnson said the test does have value. People who are concerned that traces of marijuana are still in their bodies or that they have been affected by second-hand smoke can get a personal test. He added that TRI Institute Lab's test is more accurate than the "old fashioned" enzyme test used by some employers. If an employer's enzyme test mistakenly finds that a client used marijuana, "We can provide you with documentable proof that method is outdated," said Johnson.

"You can feel pretty confident when they test you," he added. Johnson stressed that all test results are confidential. "We're not going to list patients' names"

Budget change may ease ASI fees

By Kim Holweger

The passage of a program change proposal at the state level could result in a savings of $1 per quarter in ASI fees for students.

The proposal, which would allocate close to $50,000 a year from the state budget to the Cal Poly Children's Center, would ease the financial burden on students, said Liz Regan, coordinator of the center. Although ASI fees would still be used to run the center, the financial commitment of students would decrease.

The proposal was introduced by the California State University upon demand of the students to be sent to Gov. George Deukmejian for budget consideration in January, said ASI President Kevin Swanson. The governor removed the proposal from his budget, but it was reintroduced by Sen. John Vasconcellos. It has been passed by subcommittees in both the assembly and the senate on an "augmentation check list." This is essentially a waiting list for undesignated funds from the state budget.

The proposal was placed on the list as second priority for funding from more than $90 million in augmentation requests.

Swanson said there is still a great deal of work to be done to get the funding for the Children's Center. He said, "I'm assuming if all goes well in the assembly"

Poly religious groups scorn TV evangelists

By Carolyn Duval

The recent national television evangelist scandals may have shocked the nation, but they haven't had much of an impact on Cal Poly religious groups.

Leaders of several groups generally agreed that most people don't give the television evangelists much merit.

"We've never been in favor of them — they've always seemed very shallow," said David Witterrowd, president of the Baptist Student Union.

The only visible impact on groups has been some discussion and members' concern. "Students recognize the human factor and see it as man's failures, not God's," said Ben Hammond, Alpha Omega group pastor.

All of the groups interviewed believed it was unfortunate that the actions of Jim and Tammy Bakker, Jerry Falwell, the PTL Club, and Oral Roberts have gained such notoriety and several believed it has hurt other aspects of Christianity.

"It's frustrating that people equate Christians (with certain) Christians," said Hammond. "Christians aren't better than other people — they just have a better relationship with Christ."

Dave Smiley, campus minister for United Ministries and Higher Education, said the electronic media puts people in a position where they're not supposed to do anything extraordinary.

"They're made to be so exalted as though they aren't touched by the world and they don't suffer from temptation," Smiley said. "It's an unfortunate mentality that lifts these people up to a point beyond role models."

Smiley said he believed that most Cal Poly students could care less about the whole situation. They're more concerned about Cal Poly Royal."

The Boss for United States boss?

I recently picked up an article that seemed sincere in its concern for the Reagan administration's ability to pull itself out of the mire clinging to it and to continue to manage the government. It discussed the implications of the Tower Report and the exasperating existence of President Carter's House staff. Interestingly, the next article in that same publication dealt with the new breed of "managerial candidates" — Du Pont, Babbitt, Haig, Kemp, Gephardt, Dukakis, Biden, Dole, Hart, Bush and Jackson — tossing their hats into the presidential ring.

Though November 1988 may seem like a long way off, it is probably not too early to seriously look over their applications for employment. The Tower Report concentrated its criticism of the Reagan administration on its — or lack of — managerial skills. Let's examine the United States presidency from a management perspective. If your vote in November were equal to a stockholder's vote in a major company (and it is), how would you vote?

The company — USA Corp. — has a gross product of more than $1 trillion and does more than $250 billion worth of international trade. It has offices in 141 countries, and one of those offices is currently being haggled over by its competitors.

Your company employs more than 5 million people. It carries twice that number in transfer payments through subcontracts, disability payments, health payments, pension plans and direct loans and grants. Collection of company loans are openly defaulted and an examination of the company's finances indicates millions of dollars are unaccounted for, i.e. $20 million in the Iran-Contra affair.

Your manager recently vetoed an important capital-improvement loan (highway funds), and a serious breakdown (bridge collapse) resulted in a loss of lives.

The company's image has suffered tremendously in Central America, France, Japan, Granada, Canada and the Middle East. Public surveys indicate that stockholders have lost confidence in the manager's ability, and stock prices (the dollar) continue to fall.

In the spirit of Reaganite big business, top management would have been replaced by now, and the president's four-year contract would have been broken or his resignation demanded.

His replacement would have to decide which laws to obey? If such be the case, then I think it is unjust for people like Weiser to place my life in danger. When his careless driving puts me in danger, should I not have the right to protect myself by perhaps shooting him?

Of course this is all ridiculous. His is a call for anarchy. No, society did not interfere with your right to "vote on with your life." It is your right to preserve the lives of all, including yours, from undisciplined driving habits. Your insistence only reinforces my position that your driver's license should have been revoked. Weiser, ours is a tolerant society, as evidenced by the fact that you are being given another chance to learn to drive safely — not to mention your opportunity to display your ignorant before the Cal Poly community.

Editor Weiser gives insulting insight

Editor — Perhaps you should change the title of Matt Weiser from 'Insight editor to Insult editor, because that is exactly what he has done to the intelligence of his readers with his inane column on the president's four-year contract.

Is Weiser suggesting that each person should have the right to decide which laws to obey? If such be the case, then I think it is unjust for people like Weiser to place my life in danger. More embassy guards are recalled

WASHINGTON (AP) — The investigation of an espionage scandal that has rocked the Marine Corps’ elite embassy guard force broadened Tuesday with the announcement that four guards, former members of two elite units, were being recalled from Austria for questioning.

Robert Sims, chief Pentagon spokesman, said the Marines, now assigned to the U.S. Embassy in Vienna, were suspected of possible improper fraternization with foreign citizens while posted to other embassies in Warsaw Pact nations.

The four will return to the Quantico, Va., Marine Base, where their espionage inquiry is being conducted.

A fifth Marine is being replaced for unrelated violations of “local security regulations” in Vienna, Sims said, and a sixth was recalled to appear as a witness at a pre-trial hearing Wednesday for Sgt. Clayton J. Lonetree, the guard whose arrest touched off the current investigation.

Sims also said the Marine Corps has tightened its screening procedures for new guard recruits, and he confirmed that an internal Pentagon study had recommended changes in the supervision of embassy guards.

Soviets suspect in high radiation

BONN, West Germany (AP) — West Germany said Tuesday it will ask Moscow about higher levels of radiation in Europe that some experts believe may have been caused by a nuclear power plant accident in the Soviet Union.

West Germany, Sweden, Switzerland, Norway and France on Tuesday confirmed varying increases in atmospheric radiation last month. The Soviet government denied it was the source of the emissions, which officials said caused no damage or injuries.

The Soviets were criticized after the Chernobyl nuclear disaster for failing to quickly report the plant accident, which killed 31 Soviets and spewed radiation around the world nearly one year ago.

Officials in Bonn said unusual levels of the radioactive element iodine 131 and 140 to 150 times the normal amounts of xenon gas were measured in West Germany between March 9 and March 15.

Environment Ministry spokeswoman Claudia Conrad said the radiation caused no health threats, but the government asked the Soviet Union for further information.

First couple files, gets tax refund

SANTA BARBARA, (AP) — President Reagan and his wife Nancy paid $123,517 in taxes on an adjusted gross income of $336,640 in 1986, according to a copy of the president’s tax return.

The Reagan’s tax form, which they signed on Monday and which the White House press office made available to reporters Tuesday, shows the Reagans got a tax refund of about $31,000.

They set aside $15,000 of the refund to apply to 1987, the first year, tax reform takes over.

They would call a cause for celebration. But this year is different. Reagan said that “for most of us. Tax Day has never been what

“Governor urges investment in California”

LONDON (AP) — California Gov. George Deukmejian, who is in Europe on a 12-day trade-promotion tour, on Tuesday urged members of the London Chamber of Commerce to invest in his state and to buy California products.

“A man to here to tell you that California welcomes your job-creating investment and wants to sell more of our top-quality products to your people,” said the governor, who appeared before the group at its headquarters in the City, London’s financial district, on the sixth day of his trip.

“European companies that invest in California are rewarded with a dynamic economy, easy access to affluent consumers, and low taxes,” Deukmejian said.

“The IRS expects returns from those laggards to flood the Fresno service center following Wednesday’s midnight filing deadline. When all returns are in, about 10.8 million taxpayers will have filed at the Fresno IRS center, about 12 million with the state.

The state gets more because federal returns from from Marin, Contra Costa, San Joaquin, Calaveras and Alpine counties north go to the regional center at Ogden, Utah instead of Fresno.

Gomez offered last-minute fillers these tips:

For people entitled to a refund, use the peel-off label and preaddressed envelope; double check the return to make sure Social Security numbers are entered, all W-2 forms and schedules are attached and the return is signed — by both husband and wife if it is a joint return.

Gomez also warns people to use proper postage or the IRS won’t accept it.

IRS behind in returns received

FRESNO (AP) — Like the last-minute taxpayer’s figures that refuse to add up right, the number of returns Californians had filed by the end of Wednesday’s deadline didn’t quite make sense.

Just over 6 million returns had been received at the federal Internal Revenue Service processing center in Fresno by Tuesday, down 160,000 from the same time last year, said spokesman Marty Gomez.

But the State Franchise Board in Sacramento reported it has in hand almost the same number of returns — 7 million — as on the day before the April 15 deadline a year ago.

No one is sure why the IRS is running behind and the state even with 1986. “Most people fill out federal returns first, then transfer (the information) to state returns,” said Jim Reber, Franchise Tax Board spokesman. “Possibly many people are waiting to send federal returns because they owe money, instead of getting refunds.”

Gomez said there has been a trend the past few years for more people to send returns on or near the deadline instead of filing them earlier.

“I can understand people who owe additional tax, but a good percentage of them are owed refunds, yet are still waiting until the last minute to file,” Gomez said.

The office is part a $9-million-a-year trade campaign by the state government.

The governor is to leave early this morning for Brussels and then goes to Paris.

New brain surgery to treat Alzheimer's

NEW YORK (AP) — Brain surgery developed in Mexico to treat Parkinson's disease is a dramatic advance that could lead to new treatments for strokes and Alzheimer's disease, but it requires more study because two of the 11 patients who received it have died, a U.S. doctor said Tuesday.

Abraham Lieberman, chairman of the medical advisory board of the American Parkinson Disease Association and professor of neurology at New York University, went to Mexico last week to examine the patients and said he was enormously encouraged.

"I think I witnessed history," he said at a news conference in his office. "I think this is the approach you're going to take to Alzheimer's, to spinal cord injuries and to strokes."

He predicted that doctors in the United States would rush to adopt the procedure, in which nerve-like cells from one of the patient's own adrenal glands, located above the kidneys, are transplanted into the brain to replace degenerating brain cells.

Less than three weeks have passed since the first part of the surgery appeared in the New England Journal of Medicine, and George Allen at Vanderbilt University Medical Center in Nashville has already performed the operation on one patient there. The patient is in satisfactory condition, and no improvements in her Parkinson's disease have been reported yet.

New York University is preparing to do its first transplant in May, and other hospitals will likely follow suit.

He warned, however, that hastiness adoption of the procedure could be dangerous. "My fear is that there will be a number of deaths and the government or the states will come in and say 'What is going on here?'" Lieberman said one patient died from brain seizures 45 days after surgery, and although the Mexican doctors, led by Ignacio Madrazo, claim the death was not related to the surgery, Lieberman said it is not possible to rule out such a link without further study.

The patient was given anti-seizure drugs to prevent seizures, which are known to sometimes follow brain surgery, but the patient had the seizures while taking the drugs, Lieberman said.

The cause of death of the second patient is not yet known, but autopsy results are on their way to the Mexican doctors, Lieberman said. "It's interesting that that patient also died 45 days after surgery," he said.

Efforts by Swedish researchers in recent years to treat Parkinson's disease with brain transplants had failed, but the Mexican researchers transplanted larger, acorn-sized pieces of adrenal tissue and put them in a different part of the brain, which could account for their success, Lieberman said.

Parkinson's disease is not curable, but it is kept at bay with a drug called levodopa, which is a precursor of a brain chemical called dopamine that diminishes and disappears as Parkinson's disease progresses.

As the disease progresses, not enough cells of the right type remain to convert levodopa into dopamine, and the drug is no longer effective.

Beauty college students learn it's not all shampoo and scissors when they step behind the chair. It takes a lot of work to avoid making mistakes. But for beauty college students, and people who get $4 haircuts, it's worth it.

Beauty on a college budget isn't easy. Health clubs want hundreds of dollars to make bodies lean and fit. Clothing stores want even more money to cover those bodies in the latest trendy fashions. And all too often, the price of a good haircut is more than the price of a good meal.

But there's a place in San Luis Obispo where beauty comes at a bargain price. It's where future cosmetologists spend at least 1,600 hours learning the fine points of skin, hair and nail care, it's where Vidal Sassoon and Paul Mitchell started out. It's beauty school.

"When you go to a licensed hairdresser, you're paying for the benefit of that person's experience," said John Michael Marciel, an instructor at the Setser Goatley Beauty College in San Luis Obispo. "Here the students are just beginning their careers, so we don't charge as much.

"Of course, it takes a little longer here than it does at a professional salon because the instructors come around and check the students' progress," he said. "But if you have the extra time to spare, the price is right."

Haircuts at the beauty college are $4. Permanents start at $12.50, and color changes range from $10 to $20. And at the beauty college, manicures are $3.

"I used to think this business was just for bimbos, but it's not. We have to know a lot about chemistry and science and how certain products interact with others. It's not easy."

— Lisa Furden

I'm always learning something new. But sometimes things do go wrong. "Right before Christmas I was cutting a friend's hair with some new Japanese scissors," said Roni Critchfield, "when I cut myself and had to be rushed to the emergency room. I had to get four stitches and somebody else had to finish the cut. Thank goodness she's still my friend."

Furden said that although she has never had anyone dislike what she's done to their hair, she has gotten into situations where she wasn't sure how the end result would turn out.

"Those situations can be scary," she said, "but you just have to remember everything you've learned and know that things will turn out OK. And it's really rewarding to have someone be totally excited about what you've done. That's what makes it all worthwhile."

Furden said one of the most important things she's learned from beauty school is to be confident about what she's doing.

"People are already nervous when they come in here, and it's beauty, page 6
OAKLAND (AP) — Advanced Genetic Sciences officials said Tuesday they plan to proceed with testing of genetically altered bacteria, despite an- nounced opposition that includes petitions signed by approximate- ly 1,500 test site area residents.

John Bedbrook, the AGS research director, said no ex- periment has been so thoroughly tested before its field application as the pseudomonas syringae bacteria known as “Frostban.” The company plans to apply it to 2,400 strawberry plants on the edge of Brentwood in rural Con- tra Costa County.

Frostban has been shown in laboratory trials to knock out a frost-promoting bacteria and protect plants from frost damage at temperatures as low as 23 degrees Fahrenheit. Frost dam- age costs American farmers an estimated $1.6 billion annually.

Company officials have said testing could begin as early as Friday.

Bedbrook’s remarks followed a news conference outside AGS headquarters in Oakland by op-ponents to the testing, which would mark the first tests in the country of agricultural uses for genetically altered bacteria near the community of approximately 6,000.

Opponents to the experiment announced collection of approx- imately 1,500 signatures of resi- dents within eight miles of the planned test site who oppose the experiment and want the Contra Costa County Board of Supervisors to withdraw its unanimous support.

Frostban opponents also said they will file a lawsuit in Sacramento on Wednesday to halt the tests alleging the en- vironmental impact review was inadequate.

The Frostban tests in Brent- wood have received approval from the federal Environmental Protection Administration, state Department of Food and Agriculture, local supervisors and state Department of Health Services.

Andy Caffrey of Earth First! and the Berkeley Greens en- vironmental organizations, and a representative for Jeremy Rifkin’s Foundation for Economic Advancement, said the petitions should spur the Oakland-based Advanced Genetic Sciences to withdraw because it had vowed not to pro- ceed without community sup- port.

“They said they would be will- ing to throw their bodies in front of the field to prevent anything being sprayed there,” said Jan Kroenen of the Berkeley Greens.

“They don’t want anything hap- pening to their kids and they don’t want to be guinea pigs.”

“The whole town is very suspicious this may not be good for them,” she said.

No one from Brentwood at- tended the session outside AGS headquarters. Caffrey said most people in the farming community about 60 miles away work and were unable to participate.

Bedbrook contended that the company held numerous public meetings in the community dur- ing recent weeks and has “had extremely strong support.”

just makes things worse if I act nervous, too,” she said. “I’m always sensitive to my clients’ feelings and needs. I would never do anything against anyone’s wishes.”

And whenever she starts to get on shaky ground, Furden says she remembers the advice an old hairdresser once gave her.

“She told me that it doesn’t matter what you do to a person’s hair — as long as it’s still on their head, you can fix it.”

Skill agreed that confidence is important in hair styling, especially because he is a male in what has traditionally been a female-dominated business. However, he said he thinks he can use that difference to his ad- vantage.

“A man knows what looks good on a woman, and I think I can help make the women who come to me attractive to that other men will like to look at them, too,” he said.

“Besides,” he said, “I enjoy working with all these ladies. I really feel like I can learn a lot from them.”

And for Critchfield, working with people is the best part of her job.

“I have this lady who’s about 90 years old who always comes in to have her hair washed and set. She always tells me about the olden days and how things used to be years and years ago. I real- ly like talking to her.”

in our ledger book,” he said.

“That patient’s name is lost forever — it’s just a number. I don’t want to get anyone in trouble.”

The lab tests only for mari- juana because the drug stays in the system the longest. “A heavy marijuan-smoker can quit smoking but it can stay in the system for three to four mon- ths,” Johnson said.

The charge of the test is $40, which Johnson considers reasonable. He pointed out that to have a test done through a private physician, the cost would be up to $50 for the lab work plus the doctor’s office call fee.

“There’s not a lab out here — as a matter of fact, I don’t think there’s a lab in the country — that does a test like this,” he said, although he said he had heard of one lab in San Francisco that was shut down for ad- ministering fraudulent drug tests.

The lab, which opened Mon- day, had received about 10 phone calls as of Tuesday afternoon, according to Johnson.

Mustang Daily won the first place sweepstakes award in the on-site writing competition at the California Intercollegiate Press Association convention in San Jose April 10 through 12. College newspapers from throughout California were represented. The sweepstakes award was for the paper that won the most individual awards. Mustang Daily tied with Cal State Fullerton.

On-site winners were: David Eddy, first place in editorial writing; Matt Weiser, second place in news writing; Mary Anne Talbott, third place in layout; Elmer Ramos, first place in sports writing; Dan Ruthemeyer, second place in sports writing; Susan Edmondson, first place in copy editing; Grant Shaffer, first place in editorial cartooning; and Pam Vaarna, third place in feature writing.

Mustang Daily also won several awards in the mail-in competition. Categories and prizes were: First place for best sports section; first place for best special section for the Poly Royal issue; second place for best entertainment section, first place for best news illustration, third place for best sports feature, third place for best news photo, third place for best investigative story, third place for best comic strip, and honorable mentions for best news section and best sports news story.

Ernest P. Schenone Jr., a mechanical engineering senior, won a $2,000 scholarship in the 11th Annual Statewide College Scholarship Competition of the Consulting Engineers Association of California. Schenone won second place in the competition.

He will be entered in a nationwide competition in Washington, D.C. and will compete for a $7,000 scholarship.

Albert C. Censullo, a Cal Poly chemistry professor, won a grant totaling $150,000 to teach state health workers techniques for identifying airborne toxic substances.

Censullo, who joined Cal Poly in 1974, earned his bachelor’s degree at Villanova University and his doctorate at Pennsylvania State University.

Donald Grinde of the history department has been named the first Eugene Crawford Memorial Fellow. This will allow him to work on archival research and an oral history project during the 1987-1988 academic year.

Grinde, a Yamasee Indian from South Georgia, will be based in Washington, D.C. He'll also be a visiting professor at Gettysburg College in Pennsylvania.

Elizabeth Koch, a fifth-year architecture student, won a $500 scholarship for architectural research in the field of hotel programming and planning. The award was given by SGPA Planning and Architecture.

Koch said she will apply the grant toward financing her research on space requirements for various hotel types and sizes.

The Circle K club won second place for a single service project at the district spring convention April 3 through 5. The award is for building a hay barn and tack room for Ranchos de los Animales, a ranch in Arroyo Grande for handicapped people. At least 250 man-hours went into the project.

Circle K clubs from California, Nevada and Hawaii were represented at the convention.

The club also won a third place in the silver division for total achievement through the years and a certificate of recognition for raising the most money for a bowl-a-thon for the Make a Wish program for the terminally ill.

Amelio Curti and Gary L. Korsmeyer, dairy industry veterans, have been made honorary members of Los Lecheros, the campus club for dairy science students.

Curti has been on the board of directors of the Dairyman's Cooperative Creamery Association for the past 33 years and is serving his sixth year as president of the board. Korsmeyer is chief executive officer of the California Milk Producers Association.

Bodybuilding battle returns

Students training for the moment

By Monica Fiscalini
Staff Writer

Cal Poly bodybuilders will have the chance to show their stuff in the San Luis Obispo County Bodybuilding Championships next month.

There were 30 to 40 contestants last year and more than half were Cal Poly students, said John Frey, who has directed the contest for seven years. The contest is open to San Luis Obispo County residents and Cuesta College and Cal Poly students.

This will be the first time industrial technology senior Arie Volger has entered a bodybuilding contest. He has been working out for six years and has always wanted to compete. He hopes to win the heavyweight competition.

Other classifications include lightweight, middleweight, couples and best body parts. Women are eligible to compete in each category. Frey said there will be a lot of awards given.

Volger has been working out at Maloney's Gym, calling it the best around because of the atmosphere and people there. Frey said the contest has affected the competition and sales at local gyms.

Dave Zaragoza, Gold's Gym manager and a Cal Poly business student, said there is a competitive spirit among the local gyms. Zaragoza said Gold's encourages members to enter the contest.

Volger has been using the free weight equipment at Maloney's because he can control the weight more. He said Nautilus equipment is more restricting. In addition to lifting, Volger adheres to a "brutal" diet that doesn't allow sweets, salt or dairy products. His trainer Scott Bailey pushes and motivates him toward his goals.

Volger said that despite his workout regimen, he has time for his 17 units of classes this quarter. "School isn't hard if you apply yourself," he said.

Ratto said the competition between the women will be a war on stage. She has been training for her first competition for one year. She and a friend joked about being bodybuilders in high school and when she came to Cal Poly she took a weight training class. She took that one step further when a local gym offered a membership discount.

Bodybuilding as a spectator sport has not been popular for very long. Frey said it wasn't until the 1980s that it began to get media coverage. He said the first year he held the competition it was a sellout. The San Luis Obispo Bodybuilding Championships have been held at the Veteran's See BODY, back page
The noise, the music, the people — all outcomes of the popularity of a bar. Many wait in line, sometimes for an hour, to squeeze into a building where time stops and fun is the name of the game. But for some people the concern at such festive occasions is safety.

The two key safety hazards in bars are blocked exits and overcrowding. "Exits must be clear to let people out easily," said Fire Marshall George Truppelli. "When bars are 10 percent over their posted capacity all activity must cease."

For bars, state law defines an assembly building, or portion of it, as 50 people or more gathered for drinking, dining or entertainment. According to Truppelli, an occupant load is determined by the chief building official. A dense occupant load allows seven square feet per person. Truppelli said, "This basically means people are standing shoulder to shoulder. When bars violate this, you're talking belly to belly."

"One night we had to clear Bull's out because it was impossible to move around in there," Truppelli continued.

For repeat violators the penalty involves more than being shut down. "The person responsible for maintaining the occupant load can be charged with a misdemeanor citation," said Truppelli. This could lead to a minimum bail of $100 or a jail term determined by a municipal court judge, he said.

The popularity of a bar adds to the difficulty in adhering to set policy. Bull's Tavern is one bar in this category where the number of people wanting to get in far exceeds the capacity. The line outside the door speaks for itself on any given Thursday or weekend night.

"The problem at Bull's is there is no back exit," said bartender Mark Blethen. Law requires there be at least two exits in a place with more than 50 people. The cost of adding a back exit would be very expensive for the owner of the building, Blethen said.

Bars are inspected Thursday through Saturday to make sure safety standards are being met. In the case of Bull's, on the average the bar is checked every couple of weeks. "We frequent our visits to the more popular bars," said Truppelli, "because this popularity is what causes problems in control."

Truppelli said he believes Bull's has done well at maintaining the quota for its occupant load. "All bars are safe as long as they remain within the guidelines," he said.

It's been about 10 years since Bull's has had a situation where the premises had to be evacuated. "A fire broke out upstairs in the building and it had to be cleared," said Blethen. "Luckily at the time there was hardly anyone in the bar."

The fire marshall is currently trying to prevent another situation like the one in the Beverly Hills Supper Club. "One hundred people were killed in a fire because of inadequate exit signs," Truppelli said, adding that people panicked and were trapped inside.

Some bars such as Champions do not like to exceed their occupant capacity, Truppelli said. Aside from the safety factor, profit is not necessarily dependent on quantity. Truppelli said, "Champions loses money when there are too many people and it takes twice as long for drinks to reach their patrons."

The Cal Poly lightweight men’s novice eight crew finished first in its division at Lake Natoma in Sacramento on Saturday, leading the Mustangs to a fourth-place finish in the three-day event, which was the state college championship, also saw strong performances from Cal Poly’s heavyweight men’s varsity eight and the open women’s novice four.

While the men’s varsity crew placed third to UC Davis and Loyola Marymount, the women’s novice crew finished second to Humboldt State by six-tenths of a second.

“Humboldt just had a little bit better of a sprint,” said assistant coach Wayne Rickert. “That’s what was the difference in a lot of the races.”

The third-place men’s varsity eight also fell victim to better sprints by other crews when, after leading for two-thirds of the race, the Cal Poly crew relinquished the lead and finished 6½ seconds behind the winner, UC Davis.

Rickert said that despite the respectable third-place finish of the men’s heavy weight varsity eight, the individual crew members thought they could have done better.

“UC Davis is looking very strong, but they (the heavyweight varsity eight) had beaten Loyola Marymount the week before, so they thought they should have won it (over Loyola Marymount),” he said.

Despite the strong finishes for the men’s heavyweight eight and the women’s novice four, it was the first-place finish of the lightweight men’s novice eight that was most impressive.

“They’re obviously a very tough crew,” said Rickert. “They’re undefeated right now.”

For more information on the Cal Poly crew, see CREW, page 11.

Madden tourney scheduled

The fifth annual John Madden Golf Tournament will feature such athletes as Jim Plunkett, Marcus Allen and Los Angeles Raider coach Tom Flores, it was announced late last week.

The three-day event, which will begin April 30 with an alumni tournament at Black Lake Golf Course, will feature the John Madden tournament for May 1 at Black Lake and the Virginia Madden tournament for the same day at San Luis Bay Inn.

Former Cal Poly athletes scheduled to attend include LeCharles McDaniel of the New York Giants, Dana Nafziger of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, RobbieMarin of the Baltimore Colts and Damone Johnson of the Los Angeles Rams.

The Cal Poly men’s soccer team fought to a 2-2 tie with a team from the Rose and Crown Pub in an exhibition game Saturday. Scoring the two goals for the Mustangs were Dan Campbell and Jeff Reisdorf.

The Mustangs are 0-2-1 after losing to UC Davis 2-0, Tuesday. The Mustangs will open the season Friday against Loyola Marymount.

Technology administration students will administer legitimate oilless massages covering the back, neck, shoulders, arms and legs.

Each student has been trained in a workshop by Jim Tucker, a Cal Poly student and certified massage therapist who teaches a massage class through Rec Sports. He learned massage therapy from a professional therapist and was certified after 800 hours of hands-on training.

This will be the second year of Poly Royal, Shank said last year there were only three massage tables and people had to take turns and wait in line.

“Poly Royal is very fatigueing,” said Shank. “We will be meeting people’s fatigue needs. When they come in they’re ready to take a break. We will offer relaxing shade and massages.”

R平整 will offer the massages on Friday and Saturday of Poly Royal and will also sell mineral water. The profits will help sponsor students at a national recreation conference.

With so many spectators, tanning has become an important part in preparation for competitions. Volger goes to the beach and uses the tanning booth at Maloney’s.

Randy Roquet of Club Sun sponsors one of the women competing for Ms. San Luis Obispo County Bodybuilder by giving her free tanning in exchange for her wearing a Club Sun T-shirt while she works out.

The judges are five local people who have judging and bodybuilding experience. “They really do a good job. It’s tough for them,” Frey said.

South Bay Video Productions will shoot the competition on May 2 and highlights will be shown later on Sonic Television.

Contributions for Calendar must be received by noon two days prior to the event.
