S. Korea readies for first direct presidential race in years

Seoul

A battle between opposition leaders Kim Young-sam and Kim Dae-jung over who will run for president has aroused fears that the opposition may split itself apart.

The two Kims said Sunday that they could not meet a self-imposed deadline to decide which one would run for president later this year. Aides said both men were making skeleton talks.

On Wednesday, Kim Young-sam asked Kim Dae-jung not to run, and worried party leaders formed a six-man committee to bring the two together for more talks.

The split has dismayed the many Koreans who supported massive anti-government protests this summer that forced the authoritarian government of President Chun Doo-hwan to accept direct presidential elections in 16 years. The elections are to be held before Dec. 20.

"It is profoundly regrettable, even disgusting, to witness the two opposition leaders proving themselves incapable of reaching an accord," The Korea Times said in an editorial Wednesday.

Political observers said the test could threaten chances of moving towards a more stable and mature democracy by continuing the factionalism and confrontational politics that have hobbled South Korea.

"The single opposition candidate has become a matter of national concern, not because of who would come to power, but because it would decide whether the country would be able to move towards a more stable and truly democratic government," the newspaper said.

Kim Dae-jung, 61, the party's presidential candidate, called the prospects of Roh, one of the generals who supported Chun Doo-hwan to step down in February, as "a national leader."

"It is my judgment that my running is in accord with reason and to ensure the safe transition to democracy," said the president of the Reunification Democratic Party.

The election, tentatively scheduled before Dec. 20, marks the first direct presidential balloting in 16 years. It follows massive anti-government protests for democracy in June and the decision by President Chun Doo-hwan to step down in February.

The governing Democratic Justice Party already has nominated its president, Roh Tae-woo, as its presidential candidate. The split in the opposition is likely to enhance the prospects of Roh, one of the generals who helped install Chun.

Kim Young-sam offered Kim Dae-jung, 61, the party's presidential candidate, an exchange for dropping out of the presidential race.

Kim Dae-jung called the proposal "nothing new" but said, "I need about one week or so to make my final decision."

Kim Young-sam and Kim Dae-jung are now likely to run.

Opposition leader asks rival to decline presidential race

Opposition leader Seoul Kim Young-sam on Wednesday asked rival Kim Dae-jung to drop out of the presidential race to bolster his own chances, but Kim Dae­jung said he had not made up his mind.

Kim Young-sam, 59, president of the country's main opposition party, told a news conference that if party adviser Kim Dae­jung stays out of the presidential race, he would be revered as "a national leader."

N. Senate endorses affirmative action program

By Lawrence Anton

The Academic Senate Tuesday discussed a resolution aimed at increasing the number of minorities and women employed by the university.

And, in a memorandum distributed to the senate, the Academic Senate general education and breadth committee endorsed a proposal from the office of Academic Affairs that could make it easier for some students to fulfill English, philosophy and humanities requirements.

Cal Poly's affirmative action program was established 14 years ago to help increase the number of minorities and women employed by the university.

Last March, Baker required that each department select an affirmative action facilitator to assist faculty and staff selection committees in achieving affirmative action goals when hiring employees.

A resolution submitted to the senate by the committee on the status of women reiterates the importance of the facilitator's role in achieving affirmative action goals and it expands their role to include retention efforts.

The resolution also aims to increase communication between the Affirmative Action office and the Academic Senate.

Commenting on Cal Poly's efforts to attract and retain qualified minority and women employees, Maria Ortiz, professor of biological science and member of the committee on the status of women, said, "They're doing a lot, but you can always do more."

Affirmative action officer officer Richard Wolf has noticed a significant decrease in financial aid applications from a student for that reason," said Wolf. "So the law doesn't make my final decision."

Kim Young-sam offered Kim Dae-jung, 61, the party's presidential candidate, an exchange for dropping out of the presidential race.

Act mandates changed GSL rules

By Donna Taylor

Requirements for Guaranteed Student Loans (GSL) have changed at Cal Poly, making it mandatory for all applicants to complete a need analysis.

"Due to the Higher Education Act of 1986, even these applicants must now have a need analysis," said Wolf.

"It was a boost, however, in an unrelated political situation where we had to pull financial aid from a student for that reason," said Wolf. "So the law doesn't make my final decision."

Kim Young-sam offered Kim Dae-jung, 61, the party's presidential candidate, an exchange for dropping out of the presidential race.

OPINION

Less fortunate creatures make life a carnival ride

About a week and a half ago I was finally able to get to the Rainbow Theater to see the critically loved Swedish film "My Life As A Dog." Not surprising, this warm tale of a young boy dealing with the imminent death of his mother and other assorted traumas of just growing up, has stuck in my mind.

One especially poignant theme was the young boy's ability to make himself feel better by imagining how much worse things could be. His favorite mind distraction was about a dog sent up in space by the Soviets, only to be left staring to death in the cold cruel universe after its food ran out.

For Working for Mustang Daily, no matter how far behind deadline we are, could never be as bad as the death of my mother, but I often must remember what a lucky girl I am when the feeling that my parade is being rained on comes about.

For example, this week I've made myself feel better by imagining what it would be like to be David Soul. I'm sure everybody remembers the highly philosophical TV show "Starsky And Hutch." Well, Soul played Hutch and what a claim to fame that is. Besides acting(?), he recorded some pretty horrible love songs. But talk about love, this poor guy has been accused of being a womanizer and wife beater to top it all off, a lust.

When the plight of David Soul isn't enough to make me feel lucky to be myself, I think of a poor Indianapolis, Ind., housewife who didn't even have good enough stuff for some snobbish burglars to steal. After invading this woman's home, the burglars left a note saying, in essence, "we didn't find nothing worth stealing and your sock drawer is a mess." To add insult to injury, the burglars also reportedly left $6 for the woman to buy food for her guinea pig. And if that wasn't enough, they ate all the food in her refrigerator, calling it "yummy."

There's always the case of a reporter for the Soviet Union's Pravda who has brought on the wrath of our whole country by attacking Elvis Presley. This reporter wrote, "In the last years of his life Presley turned into a monster weighing 235 pounds. He was a drug addict ... and the majority of his songs are rather mediocre." All I do is imagine the deprived and unhappy soul who would attack the King and am automatically puffed up — a regular little songbird.

When I absolutely hit rock bottom, though, I think of President Reagan who can't even get away with being a couch potato and eating dinner from a TV tray while watching one of his favorite programs. Apparently Bob Woodward's new book, "Veil: The Secret Wars of the CIA," has shed some light on the more lazy side of Reagan's character and his love of macaroni and cheese. Just reading the newspapers to see the problems facing Reagan in his efforts to run this country effectively breaks my heart. Imagine waking every morning to worry about headlines dealing with such things as crack, gibbults and fajitas. Makes me happy to be alive, even if I am past deadline.

Committee monitors animal research at Poly

By Donna Taylor
Staff Writer

Animal research, a controversial practice, has been questioned as an important moral issue. The Cal Poly Animal Welfare Committee supervises animal experimentation on campus and is determined to make it as humane and accepted as possible.

The six-member committee, chaired by William Stansfield, would not disclose the location of the laboratory used. "The committee's main concept is to make certain that all research performed is always with the animal's best interest in mind." Last year, Stansfield said, 90 rats, 27 mice and 14 rabbits and chickens were used as experiments on campus. He added that because Cal Poly can't afford the upkeep of the animals when experimentation is complete, they are humanely killed.

"It would seem economically sound to keep the animals and use them for other research," said Stansfield. "However, it is not wise to use them in more than one experiment because research depends on normal individuals and their reactions, not ones who have already been experimented on."

"Experimental research is done on several rats and mice, plus a few rabbits and chickens on campus," said Stansfield, who determined to make it as humane as possible and make sure there are no other possible routes to achieve the objectives without using animals," said Glidden.

"We decide the value of the experiment, consider if it is as humane as possible and make sure there are no other possible routes to achieve the objectives without using animals," said Glidden.

"One proposal is to insert a tube through the mouth of a rat and inject a solution into its stomach," he said. "The rat is then decapitated by a small guillotine, which brings about immediate, painless death, and the various tissues of its body are investigated." Glidden also mentioned another experiment scheduled in October in which medical technology students are required to perform cardiac puncture on rabbits, which Glidden emphasized are put out by anesthesia.

"As a Cal Poly graduate myself, I cannot stress enough the importance of the learn-by-doing principle at this school, especially for those students who are pursuing medical fields," said Glidden. "Several animals used for experimentation have similar organs and tissues to humans, and therefore research on them is vital."

"We decide the value of the experiment, consider if it is as humane as possible and make sure there are no other possi­ble routes to achieve the objectives without using animals."

— Wallace Glidden

Glidden said that Cal Poly is not a big research university, as compared to UCLA or Berkeley. "Some of the animal research done on those campuses is on a much larger scale, and I would probably protest to some of the methods used there," he said.

The remaining Cal Poly committee members are biology professors John Hampton and Aryan Roest, and nutrition professor Kris Morey. Catholic clergyman Robert McGinn is the sixth member, since federal regulations guiding animal welfare committees require that one member not be affiliated with the institution.
Soldiers, tanks prepared to protect Aquino

By Robert H. Reid

MANILA, Philippines — Soldiers backed by tanks encircled Manila on Wednesday to block any further attempts to topple President Corazon Aquino, but they withdrew after the military said no mutineers tried to enter the city.

Col. Emiliano Templo, chief of staff of the Capital Regional Command, said hundreds of battle-ready soldiers and marines rushed to the edge of the city late Tuesday after receiving reports "that rebel soldiers were coming to Manila."

But Templo said Brig. Gen. Ramon Montiano, commander of a new "anti-coup" force, ordered the troops back to the barracks about 18 hours later after no mutineers showed up.

Aquino was swept to power in February 1986 in a "people's power" uprising that deposed President Ferdinand Marcos, who had ruled for 20 years. Marcos now lives in exile in Hawaii.

Wednesday's alert came nearly five weeks after a bloody Aug. 28 coup attempt. At least 53 people were killed in the military mutiny and hundreds wounded, including Aquino's only son, Benigno III.

The latest coup scare set in motion a chain of rumors about "unauthorized troop movements" that highlighted command and control problems within the divided, poorly trained armed forces.

Templo said constabulary troops at a roadblock southeast of Manila intercepted 37 soldiers trying to enter the city.

The sources, speaking on condition they not be identified, told reporters that the rebel forces were massing in Bulacan and other central Luzon provinces surrounding the capital.

Despite the alert, one of the renegade officers, Lt. Col. Reynaldo Cabuatan, managed to slip into Manila and meet with more than 20 reporters late Tuesday. Cabuatan announced formation of a "nationalist provisional" junta to overthrow Aquino.

He denied any alliance with Honasan but said he expected the colonel's support "when we strike." Honasan escaped last month with about half his estimated 2,000 armed followers and most of the other ringleaders.

Before you choose a long distance service, take a close look.

You may be thinking about choosing one of the newer carriers over AT&T in order to save money. Think again. Since January 1987, AT&T's rates have dropped more than 15% for direct-dialed out-of-state calls. So they're lower than you probably realize. For information on specific rates, you can call us at 1 800 222-0300.

And AT&T offers clear long distance connections, operator assistance, 24-hour customer service, and immediate credit for wrong numbers. Plus, you can use AT&T to call from anywhere to anywhere, all over the United States and to over 250 countries.

You might be surprised at how good a value AT&T really is. So before you choose a long distance company, pick up the phone.
Vitamins

Saving your health, or fooling yourself?

By Marty Neideffer

It can be said that in the past few years, the pace of life on the college campus has increased. Today's students find themselves with far less free time than their predecessors enjoyed, causing many to juggle increasingly hectic schedules. One result of all this is that students are finding it more and more difficult to ensure a balanced diet.

To compensate, many are turning to vitamin supplements as an alternative to a proper diet. It is estimated that more than 40 percent of all American adults use some brand of vitamin supplement or another. Vitamins, of course, are essential to human life. They promote good vision, help form normal blood cells, ensure the proper functioning of the heart and nervous system and help the body perform many other tasks.

Unfortunately there have also been many myths and fallacies concerning vitamins and vitamin supplements.

With so many people taking vitamin supplements, it may be interesting to note that in a recent issue of U.C. Berkeley medical school's Health and Wellness News letter, vitamins were reported as possibly, "the most misunderstood, and misused, substance in the realm of health."

Do people need to take vitamin supplements? Most medical and nutrition experts seem to think not. In fact, the same Berkeley study goes on to state, "People rarely need vitamin supplements, certain groups may be prone to vitamin deficiency, but in many cases these deficiencies can be met through a proper diet."

Groups prone to vitamin deficiency include pregnant women, the elderly, frequent aspirin takers and heavy drinkers. People falling into these groups should seek advice from a doctor or nutritionist.

But what about those average people who just can't seem to fit three square meals into their busy day. Certainly they would benefit from the use of these supplements?

"If people are eating decently they really don't need them," said Sarrah Burroughs, a nutritionist at Cal Poly.

She did add, however, that if people want to take a vitamin supplement for insurance purposes, even though they don't need it, they are not harmful if limited to no more than 100 percent of the U.S. Recommended Daily Allowance. The simple fact of the matter is that most people get enough vitamins in their diet, and the extra vitamins obtained from the supplement are just passed from the system.

While these supplements will not hurt if taken moderately, they can become dangerous if taken in large, unbalanced amounts. A megadose is from 100 to 1000 times the U.S.R.D.A.

Why would people take such a large dose of vitamins? Well, probably for one of two reasons. Either they subscribe to the theory that if a little of something is good, a lot is better, or because they have accepted another of the many myths surrounding vitamins.

The cause of vitamin megadoses was most famously championed by Nobel Prize-winning chemist Linus Pauling, whose 1970 book "Vitamin C and the Common Cold," stated that megadoses of vitamin C could prevent, and even cure, the common cold.

The results of the studies have shown that vitamin C has no capability to prevent colds and only a very small effect in relieving cold symptoms.

Other myths that have grown around the use of vitamins include things like: extra vitamins will help you live longer, help you be a better athlete. These are just a few of the many myths about vitamins that persist in spite of the many studies that have proved them to be false.

One report that is not altogether false is that certain vitamins can help prevent cancer.

"Certain vitamins are known as anti-oxidants," said Dr. Carl Fullbright of the Cal Poly Health Center. "They are responsible for the destruction of chemical-free radicals that cause cancer."

Chemical-free radicals include chemicals that the body may pick up through the atmosphere or through chemicals in food or drinking water.

"It would be ridiculous, however, for someone to think they could cut and smoke two packs of cigarettes a day and think that by taking vitamins nothing is going to happen to them," said Fullbright.

Another myth is that vitamin supplements are going to help you become a better athlete. The fitness craze of the past 10 years has brought with it hundreds of new dietary supplement products designed to help develop the perfect body. One of the most popular of these products are amino acids.

Amino acids are the building blocks of protein. The theory is that by increasing their amino acid intake, athletes may be able to increase both strength and size. Dale Smith, owner of the Gold's Gym in San Luis Obispo, estimates that up to 80 percent of the people who work out at Gold's take amino acids.

Smith admitted that it may be difficult to believe that aminos really work, but that the results he's seen indicate that they do.

"Basically a lot of people are taking them and they are seeing results," said Smith.

One person who agrees with Smith is body builder Kathy Ochs. Ochs has been using aminos for the past six months and feels they are working.

"I take them all through the day. They help if I'm not getting enough protein or if I feel tired. I seem to get added energy from them," explained Ochs.

Ochs admitted that part of the effect may be psychological.

"I guess it could be the placebo effect, but I know that I'm getting a good workout all the time, so they help," she said.

Burroughs would agree. She feels that there is so much psychology involved in athletics that if the athlete believes he or she is getting a competitive edge through amino acids, he may actually perform better. She maintains, however, that there is no scientific evidence that amino acid supplements will improve strength.

Fullbright, however, added a note of caution. "One has to look at what kind of publications these products are advertised in. The products are aimed at people who are looking for something that will give them a competitive edge."

Fullbright also said that a muscle grows only upon demand and that aminos have not scientifically been proven to work.

Cuesta opens Lively Arts series with heralded international group

By Kristie Kuechler

Cuesta Community College will launch its Lively Arts Series Saturday with a performance by the International Chamber Ensemble of Rome.

The show will begin at 8 p.m. in the Cuesta auditorium.

This season is said to be the most ambitious of performing arts presentations ever.

Maestro Francesco Carotenuto is the conductor and the founder of the ensemble, in which nine different nationalities are represented. It has been internationally recognized for its innovative programming and unique elasticity in performing a vast and varying repertoire. The ensemble is in its fifth season.

In a balanced combination of symphonic and chamber music of the 19th century, the ensemble will move from the symphonies of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky to a quintet by Brahms; from the Italian bel-canto style to Wagner's "Siegfried," and from a Shubert lead to the first violin concerto by Paganini.

During this tour the ensemble will present a series of 10 well-ordered programs, each with its own theme.

Carotenuto is a recipient of numerous awards and scholarships for both his conducting and compositional achievements. He also holds the highly acclaimed Diploma di Perfezionamento in orchestral conducting and composition from the Accademia Nazionale di S. Cecilia. Carotenuto holds degrees and honors from the Conservatory of S. Cecilia, the Accademia Musicale Chigiana, and the Vacanze Musicali. He has served on the faculty of S. Cecilia since 1975.

This concert is the first of nine performing arts events scheduled by Cuesta College for the 1987-1988 season. There will be five performances the Lively Arts Series and four in the Showcase Series.

According to Barbara George, director of community services, Cuesta has expanded its performing arts schedule to accommodate the increasing demand for tickets by county residents.

"For the past few seasons we have sold out for every event and the vast majority of tickets have been held by season subscribers to the Lively Arts series," said George. The new Showcase series was booked by Christine Faukse, director of public events and community education at Cuesta. This series is expected to expand the breadth and scope of the presentations and provide residents of the community with more tickets.

Tickets are on sale now at the community services office on the Cuesta campus, at Payne's Music in Morro Bay, and at Valley Federal Savings in San Luis Obispo.

Ticket prices are $12 for reserved seats and $10.50 for general admission. Lively Arts reserved seat subscriptions are $45 and Showcase reserved seat subscriptions are $35.

Plots to export missiles and aircraft to the Republic of China uncovered

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) -- Authorities have uncovered a plot to export missiles and F-14 fighter aircraft plans to the People's Republic of China involving high-ranking Chinese officials, it was revealed in court Wednesday.

This disclosure came during a detention hearing for businessman Chang-Yao Chi, 65, of Flushing, N.Y., who was arrested Sunday. He was charged with conspiracy to illegally export arms.

Chi has links to "high-ranking members of the United Nations (Chinese) delegation and the People's Republic of China," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Mark S. Olinsky.

The F-14 is the U.S. Navy's primary fighter jet and the U.S. has never sold one to China. The missiles involved were the TOW and sidewinders.

U.S. Magistrate Stanley R. Chesler ordered Chi detained without bail after finding him a risk to flee because of his diplomatic and government contacts, who would "have the capacity and desire" to aid in his flight.

According to a complaint, Chi had links to "high-ranking members of the United Nations (Chinese) delegation and the People's Republic of China," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Mark S. Olinsky.

Take your best shot!

Heck, you can even try more than once

Do some good, huh?

Here's the deal. We want our Mustang Daily masthead, nameplate, flag, or whatever you want to call it to look different. I guess we have nothing better to do. But this time, we want you to determine what your school paper name will look like.

Above are some relics of mastheads past. The one closest to this box is, of course, what it looks like now. They're presented for ideas, sure, but mostly for laughs.

Using all assets at your disposal, design a masthead — or two — or three — or 10 — on a piece of paper or board within a rectangle the same size as the dotted box here.

All we ask is that your design contain the words Mustang Daily and Cal Poly State University, San Luis Obispo. That's the minimum. After that, no holds barred.

If you are sincerely serious about this, which we hope you are, keep the typestyle and contents of your design as simple as possible. People have to be able to read it, you know.

Turn in or mail all entries c/o the Editor, Mustang Daily, Graphic Arts Building Room 226, Cal Poly, 93407.

Anyone can enter. We mean anyone!

Deadline for entry is Dec. 4, the last day of fall dead week. The editorial staff will judge all entries. The winner will get next to nothing. Just the eternal knowledge that his or her creativity was chosen to represent the paper by those whose creative judgement is more than questionable. The winner and three runners up will be printed at the outset of winter quarter.

Good luck, kids!

King of Spain begins short visit to Southern California

By John Antczak

LOS ANGELES — King Juan Carlos I of Spain began a two-day visit to Southern California Wednesday by dedicating a statue of a predecessor who ordered the founding of this city as a Spanish colony in the 18th century.

The Spanish monarch presided over the dedication at the city's El Puebla de Los Angeles historical park, drawing a crowd of several hundred, including descendants of California's early Spanish settlers.

The 10-foot tall bronze statue of King Carlos III towered over the assembly, which sought shelter from the hot sun in the shadows of enormous fig trees.

"Today marks a great and historic full cycle of El Puebla de Los Angeles," Mayor Tom Bradley told the crowd. "It is difficult to visualize how the small city that was originally planned had become such a metropolis, the mayor said. "We have come quite a distance."

The king, who made a brief address in Spanish, noted that he was the first Spanish monarch to visit Los Angeles.

Mariachis entertained the crowd, which was occasionally pelted by falling figs, and a group of charros — Mexican cowboys — also was on hand to greet the monarch.

Later in the day, the king and Queen Sophia were to visit the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena and attend a banquet.

Earlier, at City Hall, where he received the keys to the city, Juan Carlos said: "My visit is not only to commemorate the past, but the present and the future as well."

The statue, depicting King Carlos III in armor and armed with a sword, was Spain's 1976 U.S. Bicentennial gift to Los Angeles. It was originally erected in MacArthur Park.

Six generations ago, in 1781, King Carlos III chartered El Pueblo de la Reina de Los Angeles sobre el Rio Porciuncula, "The City of Our Lady Queen of Angels by the Porciuncula River."

The Spanish king and queen had to turn down an invitation to Los Angeles' bicentennial celebration in 1981 when right-wing forces attempted a coup and assaulted the Spanish Parliament.

S.F. Giants push for new stadium
Team threatens move if Candlestick Park isn’t replaced

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — In the flush of their victory over the National League West, the San Francisco Giants are making a maximum push for voter approval of Proposition W — a ballot measure to build a downtown ballpark.

Giants Vice President Corey Busch, spokesman for the campaign, said Tuesday boosters plan to spend as much as $400,000 to persuade voters that a stadium at 7th and Townsend streets is a good idea.

"There's such a tremendous amount of good will and affection brought out for the team (in the pennant race)," he said. "Even more important, it focuses on how important the Giants are to San Francisco ..."

The proposition was placed on the Nov. 3 ballot with the encouragement of Giants owner Bob Lurie, who has threatened to move his team away unless troublesome, 25-year-old Candlestick Park is replaced.

Opponents of the downtown scheme, which has the city administration's support, hold that a stadium at the proposed location would cause monumental traffic jams, and, contrary to what proponents say, cost taxpayers many millions of dollars.

The opponents, a poorly financed coalition, says when an environmental impact report on the stadium is undertaken it will show "horrendous things on the traffic" question.
Poly hoping to improve on 4th-place NCAA finish
By Heidi Linkenbach
Staff Writer

The Cal Poly men's cross-country team is going for the gold. With five of last year's top seven runners returning, including three all-Americans, the Mustangs' chances look promising.

"We were fourth last year at nationals and plan on being in the top three this year," said head coach Tom Henderson. "With the returners we have I think that this is a realistic goal for us. We are the defending California Collegiate Athletic Association and Western Region champions, and we are looking to duplicate those efforts."

The team's fourth-place finish at nationals was the third-highest national finish in Henderson's five years guiding the Mustangs. His team finished second in 1982 and third in 1983. Assisting Henderson is former Cal Poly all-American Kevin Jones, who also runs for the Reebok Aggies. Leading the pack of returning Mustangs is senior Mike LIVINGSTON, who last year finished fifth at the CCAA championships, second at Western Regionals and 30th at nationals. He is followed by junior Christopher Craig, who last season placed fourth at the CCAA championships, fifth at Western Regionals and 21st at nationals.

Senior Michael Miner was eighth in the CCAA, sixth at Western Regionals and 24th at nationals. Miner, Craig and Livingston are all-Americans. Rounding out the pack of returners are Robin DeSota and Jim Chaney, who finished 123rd and 53rd at nationals, respectively.

Joining the team this season are Phil Ghidossi, a Division III all-American from the College of Notre Dame; Gary Charbonneau, a junior transfer from Santa Rosa Community College; and Tim Campbell, a newcomer to cross country who placed third in the 10,000 meters at last year's ICCAA track championships. Both Charbonneau and Campbell redshirted last season.

"Tim is running extremely well right now," said Henderson. "This is not a young group. It is a good, solid group that is intact from last year. These men are strong and talented. They are not easily rattled."

Freshmen Bobby Bass and Michael Parrott are two other newcomers to the squad. Both were top high school runners who could disrupt the team's top seven, said Henderson. The squad also has 18 other runners.

Wahines’ two-match sweep of Pacific last year. The volleyball player of the week has been named the Pacific Coast Athletic Association’s for her performance in the two service aces and seven blocks over the weekend. Williams, a sophomore, pounded 17 kills in each match, recording an outstanding .630 hitting percentage.

Although the Cal Poly women’s volleyball team lost to Pacific last Saturday, the Lady Mustangs became the first team since last November to defeat the Tigers in game one of a match.

Tigers in game one of a November to defeat the Lady Mustangs became the conference and 16 on the season.

Tigers’ winning streak stands since last road. From Pacific last year. The first team  since last road. The trip is being made possible through alumni grants, parental contributions and fund-raising.

In Wednesday’s Mustang Daily, a story titled “Parties prompt police problems” incorrectly reported that officers responded to complaints of party noise at Delta Tau’s fraternity house Friday, Saturday, Sunday and Monday. Police responded to party complaints on Friday and Saturday, but not on Sunday.

Monday’s visit was in response to loud music coming from a car parked nearby.

We’ve given our brains to science.

TI advanced scientifics have all the right engineering and science functions to help you function better in school.

When we set out to make our most advanced scientific calculators, we gave a lot of thought to what your science, math and engineering problems are. Then we designed our calculator around them. The result: The TI-60 and the new TI-65 are both packed with built-in functions. Plus, there are programming steps to speed you through repetitive calculations. But even though both can handle the hardest problems, they’re easy to use. Large, color-coded keys and simple keyboard layouts mean you spend less time figuring out the calculator and more time figuring out your problems.

So if you’re the kind of student who’s got science on the brain, get the calculators from the folks who’ve given their brains to science. The Advanced Scientifics from Texas Instruments.

"The Place to Go Before Going Pro"
Dukakis, said he telephoned Biden early Wednesday and apologized.

Biden withdrew from the race last week amid controversy over other incidents of borrowed rhetoric, and over disclosures that he had misrepresented his law school career.

In Washington, Biden had nothing to say. "I think you ought to talk to the governor. I have no comment at all," the Democratic candidate said.

Among the other Democratic candidates, former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt, who happened to be in Boston, said the disclosure is "not going to sink (Dukakis's) campaign." But he said he would fire Sasso. "It simply cannot be done for the sake of the cause. If there are rules and they are broken, you've got to go," Babbitt said.

Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, whose campaign had been falsely implicated in the video incident, said through an aide, "I hope we can now close the book on this incident and get on with the campaign." Although supplying reporters with details about the incident...
A top Kim Young-sam aide, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Wednesday, "It is certain now the two Kims will break away and run in the election, barring a last-minute concession by either one, which is very unlikely."

Kim Dae-jung, citing his recent trips to provincial cities which drew large crowds, said he could not ignore the strong wishes of people for him to run. Despite the split, Kim Dae-jung said Wednesday he remained confident the opposition would win in the December election, the first popular voting since 1971.

"We are not fool enough to lose the election. We will reach some kind of agreement to win the election," he said. He refused to elaborate.
