"Beyond War" holds briefing stressing alternatives to war

Wednesday October 21, 1987

By Staci Youngberg

remember the Alamo. Remember to call your mother. Remember Nicaragua.

Nicaragua? Wait a minute. Isn't that the little country in Central America that was supposed to be the next Vietnam? Whatever happened down there?

If you feel uninformed about what is going on in Central America, you're not alone.

A recent survey sponsored by a new student organization, Beyond War, revealed that students are not as knowledgeable as people might think.

One question from the survey — in the list below, circle the countries whose governments actively support non-military solutions to conflict in Central America: Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Uruguay, Venezuela.

It was almost all answered incorrectly. All 11 of these countries support non-military solutions for peace.

This is where Beyond War wants to step in. It hopes to get students to take action by providing information. It hopes people will then make the right decision about the situation.

The club is sponsoring a briefing on Thursday, Oct. 22 at 7:30 p.m. in the University Christian Center.

"The briefing is designed for people who know absolutely nothing about the Central America situation," said Staci Youngberg, coordinator of the group.

Beyond War sees itself as an educator and wants to motivate young people through education. A quote by Thomas Jefferson is one of its guiding motives:

"I know of no safe repository of the ultimate power of society but the people. And if we think them not enlightened enough, the remedy is not to take the power from them, but to inform them by education."

The long-range goal of Beyond War, however, is not just to inform students about Central America, or nuclear war, but to change the way people think about war all together.

"War is not acceptable, even as a last alternative," said Youngberg. "We want people to start thinking about this instead of relying on war as the final solution to conflict. Let's start by changing our attitudes and then worry about elimination."

Youngberg has been aware of the existence of Beyond War, a national organization, for about five years. However, she has been involved for only about two years.

THE QUESTIONS

1) In the country of El Salvador, 25 percent of the population owns 50 percent of the arable land, but 10 percent owns 60 percent, c) 10 percent owns 60 percent.

2) The fastest growing segment of Central American agriculture is: a) primitive peasant farms producing only enough for subsistence, b) large farms used to grow crops for export, c) small farms that are self-sufficient on the local level.

3) One student group in Nicaragua that was involved in the Contra war, a) was suppressed by the Sandinista government, b) was later absorbed into the Nicaraguan army, c) was used to harass government supporters.

4) During the last 35 years, agriculture exports from Central America have increased approximately 8 percent per year.

5) The volume of trading — a) $1 trillion in a 24-hour period.

6) Stock exchanges posted their a) record 508 points on Monday.

7) The Dow Jones average of 30 b) increased only one-fifth of the previous day's Depression-sized market crash.

8) Declining stocks outnumbered advancing ones by more than 5 to 2 in heavy, panic trading in the broader New York Stock Exchange.

9) The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks rose 102.2 points — a one-day record — to 1,841.01, according to a preliminary reading, after having fallen a record 508 points on Monday.

10) The volume of trading — a good measure of the market's confidence — soared to 603.8 million shares, a shade below Monday's record-shattering 604.33 million-share day.

11) "There is still a certain amount of sensitivity and nervousness in the market," John Phelan, the chairman of the New York Stock Exchange, said at a news conference. Investors floundered helplessly between optimism about a big drop in interest rates and pessimism over the chance of a recession — possibly triggered by the stock market's plunge itself.

The evaporation of paper wealth threatened to undermine the confidence of consumers, leading to reduced spending and higher saving. Those virtues, if continued, could wipe out the demand for goods and services that keeps the economy growing.

If "people rethorn enough, it would mean we'd have a disastrous Christmas season and we'd have a recession," said David Levy, a partner in Levy Economic Forecasts of Chappaqua, N.Y.

The Dow's plunge Monday wiped out 22.6 percent of the index's value, a bigger one-day decline than the Crash of 1929.

UC Berkeley sabbatical hard to bear for Poly professor

By Diane Wright

Cal Poly organic chemistry professor Jan Simek described his recent sabbatical leave at Berkeley as miserable.

"Personally and professionally, I'm not going to be back at Cal Poly," Simek said.

California State's state Legislature designed the UC system to be primarily a research institution, not a teaching institution for undergraduates. "There is no such thing as just a teacher at Berkeley," he said. Teaching students is not the first priority of Berkeley professors.

"Students are often misguided into thinking that because (the UC system) has a good reputation, their education, they will get a good education," said Simek.

Simek taught organic chemistry to non-chemistry majors at Berkeley from August 1986 through May 1987. He said teaching a class for an hour and a half twice a week was supposed to be a half-time position, allowing him time to do research. However, Simek said the administration and preparation involved in teaching a class of 500 did not allow him the time to pursue research. He described the task as a major undertaking.

Simek said he asked a teacher at Berkeley why the classes were so large and was told that it was not very efficient to teach small classes. He said the faculty's attitude toward undergraduates was "contemptible."

Simek said 1,000 students were allowed to register for a biology class held in a room that could accommodate only 50 students.

"They expect the students not to come," Simek said, adding that the university did provide a couple of TV sets in the room so more students could watch the lecture on TV, and a video tape of the lecture was shown later in the day.

"I was seeing a solution to the problems without seeing the real crisis," she said. "And if there is no crisis then we're wasting our time. But there is a crisis and the truth needs to be known. There was a war.

Dow gains 102 points in panicly trading

NEW YORK (AP) — The Dow Jones industrial average bounced back about 102 points Tuesday, but its biggest point rise ever erased only one-fifth of the previous day's Depression-sized market crash.

Both the Tokyo and London stock exchanges posted their biggest losses ever on Tuesday. Worldwide, stocks lost over $1 trillion in a 24-hour period.

Declining stocks outnumbered advancing ones by more than 5 to 2 in heavy trading in the broader New York Stock Exchange.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks rose 102.27 points — a one-day record — to 1,841.01, according to a preliminary reading, after having fallen a record 508 points on Monday.

Get your surfing in before oil walks the red carpet

"Man is prolific enough to explore across the land, but far more so at the expense of the organic diversity essential to the only world that he can live upon..." - David Brower

The ocean north of Morro Bay was as smooth as glass as I paddled under a huge wave and experienced the full meaning of riding with the flow of nature. The barrel caught up with me, and as I popped my head out of the water, a seal looked at me with a smirk. Seals seem to enjoy funny surfers.

This complete "nature high" experience, which I often get off the coast of California, is something I treasure greatly. Last weekend, while visiting Santa Barbara County, someone else got the same experience. A ten-year-old boy, difficulty swimming, had to depend on an oil rig offshore to save his life. The boy was able to hold his breath for a short time, saving his life. However, the oil rig was only a short distance away from a group of surfers.

The War Powers Act of 1973 was enacted to prevent the president from going to war without the approval of Congress. However, the legislation has been rarely used, and its effectiveness has been questioned. The act requires the president to report to Congress within 48 hours of committing US troops to hostilities and to withdraw troops within 60 days of declaring that the conflict has ended.

Bush's bluntness is better for business

Last week, as Vice President Bush began chasing the Republican nomination, he launched a campaign to restore the reputation of the Bush name. It's time to consider the impact of his nomination on the future of the country.

Bush's name has been tarnished by his father's presidency, and he needs to prove that he is capable of leading the country. Bush's blunt approach is necessary to restore confidence in the Bush name. His campaign needs to focus on issues that matter to the American people, and he needs to prove that he is the right choice for the future of the country. Flushing toilets cause owner of home to file $50,000 suit

RANDSBURG, Calif. (AP) — A woman has filed a $50,000 lawsuit against Kern County, claiming the value of her home has gone down the toilet since public restrooms were built within earshot of her front door.

The county denies the damage, Deputy County Counsel Mark Nations said.

Reba Jo Dix, in a suit filed in Kern County Superior Court, contends her house was ruined when the county built the toilets on the grounds of the county museum, near her home.

Dix "can hear the toilets flush literally hundreds of times daily," said the suit, filed by Ridgecrest attorney Roger Stein. She has owned the home for 15 years.

The suit said the restrooms, built in May 1986, are within a few feet of Dix's property line.

Nine die, 25 hurt as military jet crashes into Indiana hotel

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A military jet crashed a mile short of an Indianapolis International Airport runway Tuesday, plowing into a hotel where at least nine people died and others were injured as the plane exploded in a "fireball," authorities and witnesses said.

Up to 25 people were missing and nine were confirmed dead in the accident at the seven-story Ramada Inn Airport, which occurred just after 9 a.m., authorities said.

"Nine is the total unless they find something under debris," said Charles Green, the chief investigator for the Marion County coroner.

Neil Sullivan, a spokesman for the county sheriff's department, blamed a "counting" error for earlier reports that 14 had died.

U.S. convoy heads for strait after raid on Iran platforms

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Navy began a new convoy operation for refueled Kuwaiti tankers Tuesday, just one day after American ships destroyed Iran's off-shore platforms in the central Persian Gulf.

The Pentagon, in a brief statement, said the new convoy began sailing from Kuwaiti waters around 9:30 a.m. local time (2:30 a.m. EDT), steaming southward toward the Strait of Hormuz.

The convoy consists of two refueled Kuwaiti ships — the 80,000-ton product carrier Ocean City and the 46,000-ton liquefied petroleum tanker Gas King — and the guided-missile frigate USS Ford, the Pentagon said.

"The convoy is now progressing uneventfully in the central gulf," the Pentagon added.

This is the 12th protected convoy.

East German eludes guards, crosses West German border

HANOVER, West Germany (AP) — A 26-year-old East German man scaled border fences and fled to West Germany after eluding communist authorities who detected his escape, police said Tuesday.

The man, identified only as a bricklayer, crossed the border near the West German town of Bad Sachsa on Monday night, said West German border police in Hanover. Bad Sachsa is about 60 miles east of Goettingen.

Police said the man's first attempt to climb the barrier set off an alarm that alerted East German border guards, who began searching the area. The man hid and climbed over a fence during a break in the search.

At least 134 people have fled to West Germany or West Berlin this year.

something, or do something.”

This year Youngberg met with students from college campuses throughout the state and they wrote a manual for the new student chapters.

“The splitting of the atom has changed everything save our modes of thinking, and thus we drift towards unparallel catastrophes,” said Albert Einstein. This quote relates directly to the cause of Beyond War. It wants people to realize that with today’s technology, the way we think about war can be deadly to all, Youngberg said.

“It’s not a matter of balance of defense,” she said. “As time passes more and more countries will build their defenses until they have equaled that of the United States and Russia, and the situation just escalates. People say that ‘Maybe it will never happen, but I’m not willing to base the future of the world on maybe.’

Beyond War’s goal is not just to see the elimination of nuclear weapons because they realize that once the technology is there the weapons can always be restored.

“The philosophy must start in the home,” said Jeff Ramos, a member of Beyond War. “It’s something that is very personal.

The group hopes to begin by changing the attitudes of individuals and for them to plant themselves throughout society and spread the communication.

“What we’re doing emphasizes dialogue and openness to other points of view, especially to those of other countries,” said Youngberg. “Everyone has an opinion.”

“We’re not saying conflict is good,” said Ramos. “In fact, we believe it’s important in solving problems. Resorting to violence, however, is what we want to avoid.”

Ramos said: “People don’t realize that they can make a difference, that there are alteratives to violence.”

Central America is the module, or program, for the group until Oct. 24, when its attention will shift to other issues. Discussion will center around current events in Central America and spreading the philosophy of non-violence.

ing,” said Ramos. “But it is the only way we can begin to move beyond war.”

Student travels to rural Ghana, finds more than she bargained for

By Marty Neideffer, staff writer and Dawn Jackson, lifestyle editor

"These were the poorest people I had ever seen and could have ever imagined. They had nothing. The women generally didn’t own anything more than a piece of cloth they tied around their waists and used to carry children on their backs. A man might own as much as a casaba field, a goat, a few chickens and a few wives. They had probably had between 25 and 30 children. Probably had between 25 and 30 children. Most of the children had protruding stomachs. But it turned out that it wasn’t because they didn’t have enough food. They didn’t have the intelligence to know what kinds of food to eat. But what surprised me most was that they were the happiest people I had ever seen. They just seemed content with their lives, and that really struck me.

I feel I was more content living there than I have been living here. I was really happy.

I am an active person, and I don’t have enough food, they didn’t have the intelligence to know what kinds of food to eat. But what surprised me most was that they were the happiest people I had ever seen. They just seemed content with their lives, and that really struck me. I feel I was more content living there than I have been living here. I was really happy. Basically all I did for six days a week was work, eat and pray. I felt really whole."

So spoke Kristi Hooper, who experienced first-hand the living conditions in the African bushlands.

Hooper spent one month last summer in Ghana, a small country on the southern coast of West Africa. About the size of Oregon, Ghana has 13 million residents with 60 percent of them living in rural areas. About half of its citizens are younger than 14. Its year-round national product is not even the size of potato. It is among the poorest countries in the world.

Hooper was part of a missionary group, called Teen Mission, that traveled to the village of Obese (pronounced Oh-bay-see) to build a church and school for the natives. As one of 25 students from all over the United States and Canada who were in the group, she said she was lucky to have been able to experience the country and its people. And she accomplished much more than building a church.

"It’s funny to recall my premonitions about what the bushlands of Africa were going to be like. I couldn’t help being a little bit scared that I was going to meet up with wild cannibals or something," said Hooper, a freshman in English major.

The bus ride from the capital city of Accra to the village didn’t help much to ease her mind.

"It was a two-hour bus ride. As we looked out the window, people had less and less clothing on," she said. "We went from a bumpy road to just weeds. We were just driving through the weeds. I didn’t think we were ever going to get there."

What she saw when she arrived she described as a page out of National Geographic magazine. "I didn’t think those people in the pictures were really real, but that’s exactly how they were. Then I was actually going to live in the middle of them," Hooper said.

She said women generally didn’t wear tops and they carried everything around on their heads. "They figured out a way to swing their hope so they could balance anything. I guess it’s the best way for muscles to handle carrying things without it being uneven."

The children didn’t wear much clothing either. But the first thing she noticed about them was their belly buttons. "At first I was horrified to see that people actually had to live under those conditions," said Hooper. But she added, "By the time we left I was feeling sorry for us and the conditions we have to live under."

Her change in attitude came over time. From working with the people, and observing their way of life, she grew to love the little village with its slower pace of life, lack of competition and ease in which the people lived their lives. She also noticed that there didn’t seem to be any animosity between the people.

"They seemed so much happier than us. They always had smiles on their faces, and they never seemed to argue," said Hooper.

The only time she can remember seeing an argument was when a missionary gave one of the villagers a can of condensed food. Another villager heard of it and wanted the can for himself. A mild argument followed.

The incident made her wonder if she was doing the right thing by tampering with the simplicity of the community.

"It was like we were messing up this perfect little village," she said.

In spite of this conflict, she feels the work the team did will be of great benefit to the people of Obese. The 25-by-45-foot building took the team only three weeks to construct.

"We had a team of 17 women and four men, all between the ages of 14 and 22. Of the four leaders only one knew anything about construction," Hooper said. "Nothing against my gender, but I couldn’t help wishing we had more of the male sex with us."

At first the project seemed to be a bit more than the group could handle. "For the first week we just did some sightseeing. We had to contribute some of our spending money for building materials because it wasn’t all there. We waited a week for them to arrive. Ghana time is pretty slow.

The group worked 10-hour days to complete the building on time.

The building is the only solid structure within a 20-mile radius of the village. It is also the only structure around that doesn’t leak when it rains.

The church/school will be run by a Baptist missionary and his assistant. Hooper said the village is in dire need of the school.

"I think 99 percent of the people in that village are completely illiterate. If they do not get educated they are more likely to be taken advantage of," she said.

She added that the villagers also need to be educated in nutrition. Their diet consists of fermented corn meal and cassava roots. And while there is no shortage, the two foods don’t provide them with the nutrition they need.

Looking back on the experience, she said it was the most rewarding one of her life.

"There people are exactly the opposite of you and me. They’re the exact opposite color, their social structure is exactly the opposite and everything else you can think of is exactly opposite.

"But deep down they’re exactly the same. It took living with them to realize this.

They are living in the same world we are. They have the same feelings, the same basic drives and needs. And they have the same God, too."

She said that finally realizing this has changed her life.

"I never believed that it would be possible to bridge a communication gap like that. I couldn’t understand a word they said and they couldn’t understand a word I said. Because of this I thought I might be kind of distant from them."

But she said just the opposite was true.

"We’d teach them our songs and they’d teach us their songs. We’d all work together.

"They would always be staring at us, but I’m sure we were doing the same thing to them also. Both cultures were really curious about the other."

Hooper said she really got to know the people well. "It made me realize that it doesn’t always take words to communicate."

Recalling when she first arrived, she said she expected to get just a glimpse of another culture. "But by the end of the month, that glimpse was magnified into a vivid, vivid picture. It was just incredible."

The group worked 10-hour days to complete the building on time.

STARTS 7AM SHARP
CAREY IN A BIG RUSH TO TACKLE OFFENSES

By Kristie Kuechler

Cal Poly defensive end Tom Carey said one of the reasons the Mustangs are off to their best start in 14 years is the coaches.

But defensive coordinator Bill Dutton said Carey has done more than his share to contribute to the success.

Carey is the team leader in tackles with 11, 18 more than the next defender. After having 11 tackles last season, he already has 13.5. The junior from Maine was named to the All-Western Football Conference second team last year.

Dutton said it is Carey's attitude, desire and commitment to the team that has made him the primary defensive player.

"He wants to be as good as he can be," Dutton said.

"Carey is like a sponge, he absorbs and responds," Dutton added.

After the Mustangs' summer break, Carey returned in excellent condition and was ready to play, said Dutton. This year, he is more of a team player with leadership ability, Dutton said he did not have that last year.

Carey said the team has a very confident, positive attitude this year and the coaches have a lot to do with that. The team practices harder and the coaches demand more discipline.

"There are no dirtbags, only good players," said Carey. "We're going to keep on kickin' butt.

Carey's performance in the Mustangs' victory over Cal Lutheran in September won him WVC defensive player of the week. He made seven tackles (four unassisted), three quarterback sacks and four quarterback hurries.

"Carey's performance won that game," said Dutton.

Carey also was named WVC defensive player of the week last season for his performance against Sacrament State. In that game, he had 12 tackles (eight unassisted) and two quarterback sacks.

Dutton said Carey has ability to repeat on an all-conference player and reach heights if he continues to work on his pass-rushing skills. Dutton has helped place 19 players into the National Football League.

Carey played football at UC Berkeley before going on to coach there, Stanford, Cal State Los Angeles, Santa Ana Junior College and Boise State. He also coached in the United States Football League and the Canadian Football League.

He said the main difference between students at Berkeley and Cal Poly is the degree of seriousness at which students approach learning. "Students work a lot harder up there than here. Some of them will make more of their lives, but they will have more heart attacks."

Correction

In the Oct. 19 edition, Mustang Daily incorrectly reported that Red Ribbon week was taking place this week. The event will take place the week of Oct. 25.

Red Ribbon week is part of a statewide promotion for a drug-free society.

Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity, sponsors of the event, will be distributing red ribbons printed with the theme "The Choice is Mine... Drug Free!"

Mustang Daily regrets the error.

He said Cal Poly students have a broader outlook on life.

"In ability, the students are roughly comparable," Simek said, but added that only the top 20 percent benefit from attending a university like Berkeley. Opportunities are more for top-level students at Berkeley, he said.

"But at Cal Poly, "We're trying to educate everyone; not just the top-level students. We don't ignore the bottom two-thirds of the students," said Simek the lab for Simek's class at Berkeley was supervised by teaching assistants. He said professors at Berkeley do not supervise labs.

"There, the students get the short end of the stick," Simek said, adding that the equipment available in labs for undergraduates is minimal or nonexistent.

Simek attempted to implement the teaching techniques he uses at Cal Poly when he was teaching at Berkeley. He had five office hours a week and students flocked to his office. He said this was the result of the attitude he projected to the students.

Simek said he gave tests similar to the ones he gives here, which are not computer Scanntron scored.
