City Council approves South Street bicycle lane

By Heidi Linenbach

The plan will also retain 86 of the existing street. Cyclists because of parking maneuvers and drivers opening their doors into the bike lane. The lane can be hazardous to the north side of South Street, and work on completion of the curb, gutter and sidewalk on full width.

These spuds deliver in new SLO business

By Christie Kuechler

The thing was almost as big as a football and could feed a family of four. The potato was stuffed full of cheese, bacon, chicken and mushrooms. The cheese was warm and stringy almost like a pizza with the other toppings mixed together in the cheese.

When I visited their kitchen for a free sample I felt like I had walked into next door neighbor's house and asked him to cook me dinner. They popped the potato out of the oven, asked me what I wanted on it, made it and served it to me. I was really surprised by how good the potato was. It was one of the best I've ever had in my life. It's a match made in heaven for the owners of the new delivery service.

Spud Unlimted started delivering potatoes on Oct. 6 with most of their business coming from students in the dorms. "The only advertising we've done so far is in the dorms, fliers and coupons are appearing in the weekly," they said. Spud Unlimted negotiated by the local Coordinating Council to be in operation by Jan. 1.

American military involvement in Vietnam officially ended in 1973. Yet for some Vietnam veterans the effects of the war continue to linger long after coming home. Although more Vietnam veterans have been able to come back and lead well-adjusted lives, at least 50,000 Vietnam veterans have been plagued by serious war-related problems.

The problems of veterans are manifested in several ways: flashbacks, feelings of alienation or anger, depression, loneliness, an inability to get close to others. The readjustment problems may also result in drug or alcohol use, and sometimes even violence.

Psychiatrists say these behaviors are not caused by mental illness, but by a condition known as Post Traumatic Stress Disorder, brought on by a delayed reaction to the stress they went through during the Vietnam war.

It is true that other generations of Americans have seen the horrors of war. But the Vietnam war was an experience like no other in the history of American warfare.

For most part American soldiers in Vietnam were fighting against an enemy they could not see, to achieve objectives that were not clear. They have seen the horrors of war. But the Vietnam was an experience like no other in the history of American warfare.

The problems were only to intensify. Where veterans of past wars had parades and cheers, the Vietnam veteran came home to a world that seemed to have forgotten about them. Americans wanted something more to do with the war. They had seen enough on the nightly news.

Many traumatized veterans were unable to share their grief and guilt of the war with the people who helped them. One seemed willing to listen.

Vietnam veteran Mike Lewis returned from overseas in 1969. When he got back he immediately enrolled in school, but soon found he was no longer like the rest of the people his age.

"I went one day with my army jacket on, because I had been proud to serve in the army," said Lewis. "But there was a row of empty seats all around me. I knew then if you wanted to be in the social group you didn't let anyone know you were in Vietnam."

Many traumatized veterans began suppressing their feelings, and as a result the symptoms of PTSD began appearing. Many veterans turned to alcohol and drugs.

The divorce rate among veteran rose, they lost their job, and turning in the United States was as long as three months. In Vietnam the soldier went from training camp to the time he returned home. He was able to develop loyalty to the unit, a loyalty that provided him a feeling of purpose and as friends to help and counsel him.

In WWII the lag time between the battlefield and returning to the United States was as long as three months. In Vietnam the soldier went from training camp to the time he returned home. He was able to develop loyalty to the unit, a loyalty that provided him a feeling of purpose.

Honeymoon — a play about healing
A road trip to Ogallala to touch the intangible

The wild Praironghead grant along the tiny highway, searching for nourishment among the scraggly vegetation. They were little bothered by the occasional passing traveler. Although the pavement split their land, it was indifferently theirs because there before the pavement; they were there before any of the pavement-layers. The Praironghead and the land stand while the pavement crumbles.

The pavement people have attempted to tame America, and in isolated areas they have succeeded. But for the most part, thank goodness, America remains a beautiful wilderness. Despite all this beauty, however, I found over the course of three weeks that it is these pavement people, not the beautiful geography, that make America what it is.

Last summer, after many years of chasing, my curiosity caught up with me and I decided to take a major road trip to see what the hell is out there.

A number of enthusiastic friends (who shall remain nameless) abandoned their original plans to come along, and I was left with no one to ride shotgun and help with the driving. But I had to do this, and my decision to go solo was met with stern gestures from my parents.

My dad actually said, "Watch out for rednecks." I couldn’t believe it, but he wasn’t joking. "The more you tell people about yourself, the more trouble you’re going to get into," they said. Naturally, I ignored this advice, but in the back of my mind it mortally wounded my confidence.

It’s a weird feeling to travel alone across country. It’s like being in a foreign country because your California license plate really makes you stand out. When you’re in Idaho with nothing but a car to rely on, all those Idaho plates seem to just glare at you like a beer to an alcoholic. Everybody knows you’re not from ‘round these parts, and they’re wondering what the hell you’re doing there.

But they seem to wonder with overwhelming curiosity, not with any hatred for Californians. After all, it’s not like I’ve got Russian plates.

America is a fat and friendly nation. Not just fat; it’s friendly. Not physically, but spiritually. Over the miles I traveled I saw some of the most grotesquely fluid humans I have ever seen, and I realized that there is a completely different population outside of California. It seems that most semi-rural Americans are overweight and inactive. The health of our nation is in a sorry state of affairs overall. America is so rich in such beautiful tracts of land and in such wonderful places that it is hard to take, oh, at least six Sports Illustrated swimsuit girls to even come close.

But as this little illustration hopefully shows, without its America is just a bunch of attractive dirt. I went on this trip to see America, and I thought that by driving around and gawking at the scenery I would get an understanding of our nation. I saw the buttes of Utah and the mountains of Colorado. I saw the plains of Nebraska and the wide open prairies of Wyoming. And the lush coast of Washington was really stunning. But all I came to understand were the geography lessons pumped into me at Lafayette Elementary School.

The people out there weren’t, "rednecks" and they weren’t out to make my life miserable. They were just normal people going about their business in a home that was not completely out of the reach of the high-speed world.

But without exception, the people I met between here and Ogallala, Neb., were practically jovial.

Out there I found a million Americans out there, and they didn’t give a damn about the people in back here.

Letter to the editor

Extinction is irreversible

Editor:

In response the rabid samblings of Dan Fredericksen (Nov. 13), I believe it is our responsibility the human race as a caretaker of the earth to protect its inhabitants.

Extinction is irreversible. For every plant we lose to extinction we may lose a medical cure, an improved source of food or other beneficial product. In every species lost is a gap produced in the finely knit intricate web of general diestiny. The human race cannot survive for long in a world where the good pools have become stagnant. This is what people such as Joe Cickey and many others (who aren’t liberals) are trying to point out. I don’t believe you can call this anti-Western propaganda.

As for Joe’s other activities, for the promotion of peace, I can only commend him for his beliefs. Wars of ideology have done more to rob the human race of life than any disease, including AIDS.

Jean Hayes

GLENDALE (AP) — City scrooges are putting an end to the residential Yule wonderland built by Robert George, the presidential Santa Claus whose home is a joyful seasonal beacon to some and a gaudy eyesore to others.

George, 63, said Wednesday he was signing an agreement reached with the City Attorney's office that effectively shuts down the holiday decor adorning his modest, three-bedroom home 15 miles north of downtown Los Angeles.

"But I don't like it. I've been pushed into it," the bearded, retired Nebraska barber said, breaking into tears. "If I don't sign ... they will come in here and take it down." The City Attorney's office said the house is "a public nuisance to the whole neighborhood." Neighbors have complained to the city that homes are losing value.

The city claims the decorations are a safety hazard for motorists and that trips through George's house violate residential zoning codes.

George, who celebrated Christmas in the White House for 26 years as the official presidential Santa, will no longer be free to open his home to groups of disadvantaged, mentally ill and dying children.

The research, published in Thursday's New England of Medicine, adds to the evidence against smoking. Cigarettes cause lung cancer and emphysema for both sexes, and in women they are linked to cervical cancer, early menopause and damage to the fetus during pregnancy.

"Any doubt about the effect of smoking on acquired heart disease in women should be erased" by the latest research, concludes that no level of smoking can be considered safe. Women who smoke fewer than five cigarettes a day sharply increase the risk, research concludes.

Until a few years ago, many experts believed that cigarettes did not contribute to heart disease in women. But recent studies have concluded that smoking is an important hazard for women, as it is for men.

The study demonstrates "the overwhelming importance of smoking for coronary heart disease in young and middle-aged women," said the study's director, Dr. Walter C. Willett of the Harvard School of Public Health. "It looks like cigarette smoking can account for approximately 50 percent of the total number of cases of coronary heart disease in that group."

The latest research, based on the Nurses Health Study, concludes that no level of smoking can be considered safe. Women who smoke fewer than five cigarettes a day have two to three times the heart disease risk of non-smokers.

"We are just trying to keep the Christmas spirit alive for them, but there will be no Christmas spirit in Glendale this year," he said. "Santa needs help."

The year-round Yule display of lights, plastic reindeer and ornaments must be removed from the red-and-white candy cane-colored home by Jan. 1. "It looks like the last season for me," said George.

RAIL OR M.L. BRADY,
There's a conflict when faculty members only recognize one point of view... Different views should be voiced... — John Culver

"There's a conflict when faculty members only recognize one point of view or one set of tests. Different views should be voiced and, if backed up, given as an answer on an exam." While many professors agree that giving them own opinion can be effective for the student, some disagree as to the relevance of student opinion.

Animal science professor Frank Fox said he states his opinions at the outset of his class. Although he allows opposing views to be voiced, he said students "better agree with me on the quiz." Ornamental horticulture major Mary Cysewski said he has at least one opinionated professor per quarter, and that students don't offer much opposition.

"They (instructors) don't really encourage it," he said. "They don't really want to hear your opinion, but if you are willing to stand up and argue they will hear you out. Then argue with you." Cysewski said he thinks teachers readily state their opinions because they feel they have a lot of experience and believe it will be for the good of the students.

Many students say they have classes where only one view or opinion is represented, and that equal time for other views is not. English professor Kathleen Lant admitted to being opinionated in lectures but said she loves to hear students' views.

"I think that even if you are talking about something as objective as mathematics you have to have a point of view," she said. "As long as I am honest and prefer that students do have a point of view, and as long as I allow them to express their view, it's healthy. That's what education is all about." Ornamental horticulture major Andrew Moreno said he appreciates professors who state their opinions in class.

"It shows what they're thinking. No one wants an instructor to teach straight out of the book," Moreno said, adding that a teacher's opinion allows students to see things from a different perspective. "A person who is 40 will look at something very different than someone who is 19," he said.

But some students think it hampers the education process. John Rose, an agriculture business management major, said he has had classes in which students offering views opposing the teacher are dealt with jokingly, almost ridiculed.

"It's hard to sit in a class like that," he said. "It deterred from the course and made me not want to go to class." Physics professor John Poling sees it as a style of teaching, and said a professor shouldn't be forced to teach any certain way. But some professors see stating their opinion as more than an option of how to teach. They see it as a responsibility. Education professor Jack Jones said he labels his opinions as such and tells students to investigate the issues.

"I think I have a responsibility to express my opinion, to allow them to express their opinion and to encourage students to think and share opinions that they have," he said. "The big danger is when students hear the opinion of professors and accept it as gospel when it's nothing but opinion. Professors, for all their education and years of experience, are just human beings." Rose and Cysewski said it's up to the student to complain and keep a professor's expression of opinionated views in check.

Glen Irvin, associate vice president of Academic Affairs, said such situations usually are handled between students and faculty members, and if it gets past that point it is handled within the department or school. But who decides where to draw the line? Donald Coats, associate dean of Educational Services, said there are no hard-and-fast rules or university policy governing a professor's liberty to profess opinion in the classroom. The only document addressing the issue is the faculty code of ethics. The code says a teacher's primary responsibility is to state the truth as the professor sees it and to "accept the obligation to exercise self-discipline and judgment in using, extending and transmitting knowledge." The code also says that by acknowledging significant assistance from students, a professor protects academic freedom.

But what is academic freedom? The definition isn't cut in granite. If one exists, it can be defined as a general standard of ethics dealing with the concept of censorship. It prevents restrictions on the professor and allows for a balanced atmosphere for learning.

Irvin said academic freedom involves a lot of judgment and that no specific line can be drawn to decide how much freedom it offers. He said it is built into state and federal policy and protects the faculty.

"If we don't protect the faculty they could suffer undue public recrimination," he said. "That's censorship." Irvin added that bowing to administrators or pressure groups would be the same thing. Typically professors agree that there shouldn't be any guidelines to restrict teachers in the classroom, and say it should be up to the professor to use good judgment.

Business major Torrey Scharton recognized it as a ethical question.

"It's a standard that would go along with the profession," she said.

Differences that separate Moslem, other religious groups discussed

By Lynne Hasselman

Moslems and non-Moslems alike packed the San Luis Lounge Tuesday night to hear about why Islam is such a misunderstood religion.

Siraj Wahaj, who runs a mosque in New York, was the speaker. He focused on how the religious beliefs and lifestyle of the Islamic religion differ from other forms of worship.

"One of the differences between Islam and other religions is that we believe in Jesus as Messiah, but we don't believe that he died to atone for our sins," Wahaj said. "We believe everyone is responsible for their own sins and it is up to them to come to God and repent."

Moslems don't believe that God had any son at all.

"Allah did not need any associates at all," he said. "When you read the scriptures, they said Jesus promised one coming after him. The scriptures predicted Muhammed as the messenger of Allah."

The backbone of the Islamic faith is the Qur'an, which is the basis for the Islamic teachings and laws, and the Hadith, which is the sayings of Muhammed.

Poindexter, North may face charge

WASHINGTON (AP) — The congressional Iran-Contra report has hammered President Reagan with embarrassing evidence that complicates White House efforts to revitalize his damaged administration in the twilight of his term.

The White House strategy for dealing with the problem? Try to ignore it, hope it will go away and play up the report's dissenting views. Argue that the majority findings are "predictably partisan" and nothing more than "the subjective views of the members."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the highly critical document culminates "the long summer of self-examination for America and for the administration. And now we see "Reagan," page 9

Call your mummy.

You remember. She was always there when you were frightened. And if you got hurt, she was standing by with bandages. Wouldn't it feel good to talk to your mother again right now?

Calling over AT&T Long Distance Service probably costs less than you think, too. And if you have any questions about AT&T rates or service, a customer service representative is always standing by to talk to you. Just call 1 800 222-0300.

Sure, your schoolwork and your friends keep you busy. But call home and find out what she's wrapped up in.

Friend asks help for friend

Editor:

My name is Joseph C. Rance, Jr. I would like to tell you about a dear friend of mine who is in desperate need of financial support from Cal Poly and the San Luis Obispo community (students, faculty, residents, churches and community organizations).

On Sunday, Nov. 1, 1987, Abdul Kadir Farah's 18-year-old brother, Mohammad, was hit and killed by an automobile while riding across the Foothill and Santa Rosa intersection in San Luis Obispo. Mohammad had arrived in San Luis Obispo from the African country of Somalia to attend Cal Poly with his brother.

The expenses related to funeral arrangements and transportation to Los Angeles for burial were high, and Abdul (as well as other Muslim students, faculty and friends) covered these costs out of their own pockets. These costs, added to the high cost for a foreign student at Cal Poly (about $12,000) have caused Abdul to experience extreme financial difficulty.

I am asking all of you to help us support Abdul by making donations to help him get through this difficult period in his life. Not only is he in a precarious financial situation, but he also must continue with his studies while mourning the loss of his younger brother. Cash or check donations can be sent to:

Joseph C. Rance, Jr.
Diablo Hall 25
Cal Poly State University
San Luis Obispo, CA 93407

Make checks out to Abdul Kadir Farah, please.

I want to thank Elaine E. Holder, PhD, a Cal Poly faculty member who teaches a course on death and dying, for the encouragement to develop this memorial fund. I also want to thank each one of you in advance for your assistance and support of this effort.

Sincerely,

Joseph C. Rance, Jr.
Congress was acceptable.

Reagan participated in the effort to hide the sale of weapons to Iran and the diversion of funds to the Contras, the report said he misled the nation, failed to provide leadership and tolerated an environment in which aides felt that lying to Congress was acceptable.

"We are moving on, and we trust that out of this experience there will come a new wisdom about the process of governing in America," Fitzwater said.

If recent history is any guide, however, Reagan will not be able to put the affair behind him.

"The general feeling is to just move on, and we trust that out of this experience there will come a new wisdom about the process of governing in America," Fitzwater said.

Fitzwater acknowledged that William P. Clark, the president's close friend and onetime national security adviser, had urged Reagan to pardon Poindexter and North.

"The president has received a number of letters, perhaps in the hundreds, from citizens large and small, public, private, and rich and famous, making the same recommendations," Fitzwater said.

However, Fitzwater said it was premature to talk about the matter. "We don't discuss pardons. We don't think the issue of pardons is even suitable for discussion."

In two public appearances Wednesday, Reagan made no mention of the long-awaited report of the joint House and Senate investigative committees.

Unlike earlier occasions, such as the release of the Tower board's report on the affair or the end of the nationally televised congressional hearings, Reagan does not plan to give his side of the story in a speech from the Oval Office, Fitzwater said.

"The general feeling is to just say it's over and there's no reason to get into another big shouting match on it," said a senior White House official, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

"If it's any comfort to the White House, Danil Inouye, D-Hawaii, chairman of the Senate panel, said investigators had found nothing that would warrant impeaching the president.

"I do not believe the dereliction of duty we have cited would constitute such an offense," Inouye said.

What's next?
Buy a printer with your Macintosh and conserve paper.

A Macintosh personal computer and an Apple ImageWriter II printer will save you hours of time. Not to mention gallons of correction fluid and reams and reams of paper. And, if you buy both now, the first ream of paper you'll save will have a lovely green glow.

You'll save a bundle of cash when you purchase an ImageWriter II printer along with your choice of a Macintosh Plus or a Macintosh SE. Either way you'll be able to turn out beautifully written and beautifully printed papers. And we'll even try to help you pay for your purchase with a variety of financing options.

We feel compelled to tell you, though, that a deal like this can't last forever. So it's a good idea to see your campus microcomputer center today. And join the conservation movement.

The power to be your best.
Hall of Fame gets 13 first members Friday night

Poly opens season with Saturday meet

New Cal Poly swimming coach Richard Firman will make his debut this weekend by having the men's and women's teams face defending national champion Cal State Bakersfield and the women take on San Jose State. The meet begins at 1 p.m. at the Cal Poly pool.

This will be the third straight year the Mustangs have opened their season against the nation's best teams, but unlike the first two, this year the Mustangs are well-rounded enough to have a chance at keeping up.

The Mustangs will be led by all-American Neil Leary and Eric Rinder. Leary was 11th in the 100-meter butterfly at last year's nationals. Rinder, who red-shirted last season, will be fourth in the 100-meter individual medley.

and seventh in the 200-meter individual medley at the 1985 nationals.

However, Cal Poly will be without sophomore distance specialist Rich Swoboda, who transferred to Oakland University in Swedesboro. See SWIM, back page

Graduating in 1960, he guided Cal Poly football. Madden then went on to play with the Chicago Bears before becoming a football coach. Madden is currently the commissioner of the National Football Conference, he has been in that position since 1982. Madden was a co-founder of the Western Football Conference, he has been its commissioner since 1992.

Hughes coached the Cal Poly football team from 1950 to 1961. His teams were 73-37-1. Jeter was a running back in the mid-1950s. An All-American, he went on to play with the Chicago Bears.

Kline, a wrestler, won three NCAA titles in the late 1960s. He is president of Supporters of Mustang Athletic Teams.

Klenz was Cal Poly’s first all-American swimmer. Lenz was Cal Poly’s first all-American swimmer. He represented the United States in the 1959 Pan American Games and the 1960 Olympic Games.

Moroski is the only basketball player to have been a four-year starter and an all-league player each of those seasons. He led the Mustangs in scoring all four years.

Mott was a baseball coach, faculty member and head of the physical education department in his 32 years at Cal Poly. He established the series of coaching workshops still held each year.

O’Neill, who has been instrumental in helping the athletics department achieve financial stability, helped found SUMAT in 1985.

Sheriff, a center in the early 1950s, was the first Mustang ever to play in the East-West Shrine Game. He also played with three NFL teams. He is the athletic director at Hawaii.

Smith, who holds the NCAA record for the javelin, has competed in the last three Olympics. He placed eighth in 1976 and 1980.

THE MUSTANGS

Will face wrestlers from Arizona State, Air Force, Ft. Lewis College, Phoenix College and Embry-Riddle Aeronautical College.

We would like to extend our deepest gratitude to the students and faculty who have supported us throughout the season. Once again, you made your presence felt, not only by those of us on the team who appreciate you so much, but also by the other teams who feared our fans. You have helped us keep the exciting tradition of Cal Poly volleyball alive.

Thanks again for your enthusiastic support. We look forward to your continued support in the years to come. You’re a great group of fans!
