GE classes could be easier to find
S. Senate passes resolution to broaden course selection

By Kristi Penniman Staff Writer

Six county groups told the County Board of Supervisors Thursday morning to protect San Luis Obispo country's air quality from oil development pollution and not worry about time.

Beryl Rechenberg, adviser to the American Lung Association, said, "Whether this project appears on the June or November ballot is immaterial," said Rechenberg, adding that preserving the county's air quality is what's important.

The project is Shell Western E&P's proposal to build oil platform 9.5 miles west of Point Sal and an onshore oil treatment facility near Nipomo.

Emissions from the gas turbines used to power Platform Julius could create smog problems for the county, and this issue is hindering negotiations between Shell Oil and the county.

"The Board of Supervisors is trying to meet the Jan. 26 deadline for putting the issue on the June ballot."

"The unfortunate death of the Shell corporation attorney and the illness of our county super­visor during the negotiation process of this project," said Adele Steris, president of the League of Women Voters of San Luis Obispo. "Now we're con­cerned that in an effort to make up time . . . informed public discussion will be given short shrift."

"The county's Department of Planning and Building expects an agreement to be reached soon."

In a telephone interview after the news conference, John Euprat, Energy Division staff member, said, "We are still negotiating and expect to have a product for public review by Fri­day.""The department of Planning and Building has been working with Shell to set emission limits and inspections to ensure effective en­forcement of those limits.

In early January, the staff and Shell agreed on emission limits, but Shell urged enforcement be left to Minerals Management service, the area of the Interior Department charged with overseeing offshore oil develop­ment in federal waters.

"The marriage between MMS and Shell is tenuous. It signals that they'll be partners in the long operation. That's in­tolerable," said Robert Griffin, former city councilman.

"The Planning Commission's recommendations for controlling air pollution on the platform were already a compromise and do not require the most effective air pollution control measures," said Griffin. "That's got to stop."

Other groups represented were the Citizen Planning Association, Sierra Club, Environmental Center and Public Interest Ac­tion Center.

"We're going to let (the GE&B committee) be creative and decide" which extra courses can be added, Echeverria said.

With GE&B requirements, some students are forced to take classes which may be uninteresting to them. By broadening the selection, the university would be more likely to meet students' personal interests.

Departments could offer more selection in upper division courses, Echeverria added, that would allow students to pursue a field that they were in­terested in, other than their major.

Many complaints were raised about the wording, saying it seemed to be asking for a reduction in the number of GE&B units that should be required.

The resolution passed unanimously after a major amend­ment would send the resolution to a trial basis.

School of Business Senator Michelle Seck moved that the amendment be made to the reso­lution stating that it would be on a trial basis.

But ASI President Stan Van Vleck and Crabb said they would not send the wrong signal to faculty members who might just wait out the trial time and then rally against it be­fore the amendment was dropped.

School of Engineering Senator Tom Lebens con­ceded it failed unanimously.

School of Professional Studies and Education Senator Kelly Rosander rejected the system for tenure or promotion considera­tions.

"The marriage between MMS and shell... signals that they'll be partners. That's intolerable." — Robert Griffin

"This form, comprised of 39 questions with answers on a five-point scale, would be ad­ministered every other quarter."

"Don't go into this with false expectations," said Charlie Crabb, Academic Senate repre­sentative on the senate. "There could be faculty who won't gain from it."

"Students will not have access to the results. They will be seen only by the instructor for per­sonal use."

"Much of what's going on is happening behind closed doors and out of the public view," said Griffin. "That's got to stop."

The resolution passed unanimously after a major amendment was dropped. But the resolution was continued until fall 1988 at the earliest.

"We're going to let (the GE&B committee) be creative and decide" which extra courses can be added, Echeverria said.

The resolution calling for a wider selection of General Education and Breadth classes was passed by the Student Senate Wednesday night.

"The concept behind it was to reduce the number of GE&B courses in the selection of GE&B classes," said School of Engineering Senator Tom Lebens, co-author of the resolution.

The recommendation will go to the Academ­ic Senate's GE&B committee, where "the specific­ties will be hammered out," said School of Agriculture Senator Ricardo Echeverria, the other co-author.

If passed, the resolution will go to the university administration for final approval.

Chumash 'exit' signs found radioactive, but amount is below NRC safety limits
By Shelly Evans Staff Writer

Radiation is expected to be common at Diablo Canyon, but it may also be common in Chumash Auditorium.

"While we're experimenting with a new system that, when perfected, will benefit everyone, and you especially, some kids still have to be worked out, so we've gone back to the drawing board. Hopefully, we'll have the whole thing worked out soon. Once again, we apolo­gize for any inconvenience if you were planning on sending a child to Center," said Curt Hansen, a radiation safe­ty instructor at Diablo Canyon nuclear power plant.

The week is sponsored by the Cal Poly Students for Social Responsibility, Interfaith Council of Children's Defense, Student Action Network and PSR/Cortia Billboard Peace Project. The little boy Gary who tries and tries

The standup comic of the '88 Presidential race is again looking down both barrels of the news media, and it only shows the mockery that he is making of the American people and their political system.

When Hart said, "Why not?" and not backed off onto the scene, he invited the media to scorn his past. Well, the Miami Herald took him up on it. The Hart campaign organization is now accused of failing to disclose certain 1984 contributions in accordance with Federal Election Commission rules.

Meanwhile, Hart is telling the news media for all he's worth: His grassroots "I'm a real guy" preaching has spurred millions to support him out of sympathy, and he knows exactly what he's doing. When he reentered the campaign, he scored dozens of free hours of television time on national talk shows, and appeared to be a candid, wholesome dude. But that's what television is: a media for appearances, not substance. The people are it up.

Hart is telling his staff to look into the Herald report, has asked the FEC to do the same, and has pledged to hold himself personally responsible. To be true. The best we can say is that so far he has been consistent in his philosophy. And the people will probably still eat it up.

But it is clear that Gary Hart is not fit to run the country. Inherent in the facets of presidential character should be integrity and sound judgment — both should be second nature. And the people will probably still eat it up.

Pondering a pink paradise

It seems every town and hamlet in this great country of ours has to insist on having a tourist trap. Murphys has Mencer Caverns, San Jose has the Winchester Mystery House, and Emeryville has Rusting Abandoned Cars.

San Luis Obispo has nothing, at least. The Madonna Inn, (no relation to that tramp married to Sean ' drink, anymore), consists of two places, one suitably called "Luna Verde," currently being demolished by the City, and the other, "Madonna Plaza." There is a two-story gift shop, and in accordance with Federal Election Commission rules, you will vote for the inn. You vote for the inn by buying the "Luna Verde" coffee mugs are paise at the novet Inn.

How can you describe the lobby? How can you describe spray-on ceilings, rock skin to a Hollywood starlet? It's a chandelier made out of conduct wire, staircase shaped like grape vines, Christmas decorations still up, and pink PINK! It's so sick pastels were annoying, come here where the baths pinkly.

Letter to the editor

Bowlers are bowled over

Editor: The plight of the bowling alley is hopeless. For two and a half years, the bowling club secretary has been left to sit and rot. Every attempt to save the bowl has failed. Surveys and polls done in the past two years prove the strong support from the bowl and every member of the club. The Cal Poly bowling league just started this quarter. A small ad in Mustang Daily running only three days produced more new people than the league could accommodate. The league has 60 new members this quarter with more than 20 new bowlers. The sad thing about our situation is that we had to turn people away. I am the secretary of the bowling club I have never had to deal with, nor have I ever seen the need to turn people away from this source of recreation. The league has lost strong supporters due to the chief, John and school, not to lack of interest in bowling, and the many new bowlers show that the interest in bowling is still strong. There is only one bowl left in town and there is only one league for Cal Poly. There are several gyms in town for weight rooms as well as numerous spaces that can accommodate bowlers. What do we need more? The bowling alley has been given a RAW DEAL.

Attempts to bring to the front the methods used to extirpate the league have not been acknowledged. Is there anything that us students that can do either reopen the bowl or destroy it instead of keeping it as a stagnant issue? The interest of students is at stake.

I would like to apologize to those people the bowling league had to turn people away. I think the ASI dorms owe them an apology for putting the bowling club on the back burner. I do have the facilities here on campus still unused. As student Meg Babcock recently said, "This is the one place that keeps the plastics industry alive in America."

Grab a cup of coffee in the glf's coffee shop, complete with St. Pauli Girl-style waitresses. Or hit the bars. Anytime's a good time for a drink in the city. You're dealing with importance, fella.

Want a room? Come choose from a book of thousands of individual families. Rooms can be chosen with just the whish of a page, to satisfy your every lodging whim. "Sugar and Spice." Everything Nice. Gee, they're next door to each other. "Hears and Flowers," "Whispering Hills," "Edelweiss." These names alone would lead you to think you must be holding something "Madonna Suite — adopting the tactics and decor favored by Alex and Phyllis Madonna." I didn't know they were up for adoption.

A tribute to CalTrans, "For your Room." A pink paradise, traffic lights and carpool lanes never appealed to my sleeping habits.

"Of being Sultang." Blue-sire morals of a dope dinkin's doesn't sound too bad. They're right. Oh well. At least they don't have a "Fort Anon." "Plays Continue." Now past the fake grape chandelier to the bathroom.

The Men's Room is a landmark unto itself — so famous that curious womenfolk wander in occasionally to peak a peek at the modern plumbing. For those Not In The Know when one takes a leak in the urinal, an electric eye senses the motion of human waste, and it is chuncked up and turns on the "falls." Water cascades down a rock-like formation in the awaiting drain. Urima never felt so good.

That's about the whole tour. Correction: that's all they really need to know. The West Word Al. could love it. But it's ours, and puns and puns and puns and puns, and puns, and we're terrible dearie the burning of the eternal pink flame.

Attorney gets 3 years in jail, tries to dash from courtroom

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An attorney unsuccessfully attempted to flee a courtroom after a judge who sentenced him refused a request that he be allowed to surrender to prison officials instead of going to jail first, officials said.

Superior Court Judge Paul Boland had just sentenced attorney J. Bruce Johnson, 41, to three years in prison for his involvement in a scheme to cheat the Southern California Rapid Transit District out of an estimated $5 million when Johnson tried to dash from the courtroom.

Deputy District Attorney Stephen Lierker said that after Johnson was sentenced his attorney asked Boland to let him surrender directly to the California Institution for Men in Chino.

Boland, denying the request, said Johnson shouldn’t be treated differently than anyone else.

Majority of serious criminals test positive for illegal drugs

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than half and in some areas nearly 80 percent of the men arrested for serious crimes in a dozen U.S. cities tested positive for illegal drugs, the Justice Department announced Thursday.

The testing sponsored by the National Institute of Justice found that 79 percent of those arrested in New York from June through November tested positive.

Drug use was least frequent in Phoenix, where 53 percent of those arrested tested positive.

The new information provides "overwhelming evidence that links drug use to criminal activity," Attorney General Edwin Meese III told a news conference.

"Drug abuse by criminal suspects far exceeds the estimated use in the general population, where it appears to be leveling off," said Meese. "Among criminal defendants, however, it seems to be increasing."

Philippines won’t let women work overseas due to abuse

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The government will temporarily suspend issuing permits to allow women to work abroad as domestics because of widespread sexual and other abuse, Labor Secretary Franklin Drilon said.

He said the decision was taken at Wednesday's Cabinet meeting and would affect Filipino domestics seeking jobs worldwide.

Maid's working for senior government officials, diplomats and certain other categories of employers would not be affected.

The order follows growing demands by human rights groups for government action to protect women who go abroad as maids and are forced into prostitution or are paid salaries below those promised.

Women already working as domestics overseas could renew contracts if their employers were "human."

Rock 'n' roll with the Meat Puppets — Huevo style

The best band in the universe

People should come to see the Meat Puppets because we're the greatest band in the universe and... See, when you ask me a question like that I blow hot air... what am I going to do, say some thing like, 'we're fucking Bon Jovi — we'll rock you all night long and give you the hope to carry on living.' It's very near and dear to me — The Meat Puppets. What we do, and why we do it is because it's my life and I'm very involved with it and I use it as mental stimulus to take my self places I need to go to placate this knowing feeling of being.

Didn't the Jesus and Mary Chain say they were the best band in the universe??

Well, they're obviously a little wanker English post-punk band — you know talentless punk, butt-bras. We are the high-flying, immortal, memora ble, amazing Meat Puppets. What does it take to do rock 'n' roll? Well, for us it is taken strictly as being ourselves and never latch on to anything other than our own whimsy.

Cuesta offers performance art

Three internationally known artists will use many media to create an art performance titled "Out of Time" at Cuesta College tonight.

Terry Allen, Mike Henderson and William T. Wiley will present a free performance at 7 p.m. in the Internet Theater in collaboration with an exhibit of their works that will run through Feb. 22.

Allen works with media from painting to music to create an album "Cocktail Desperado" co-written with David Byrne.

Henderson, in addition to being a painter and musician, is an art professor at U.C. Davis.

Wiley's paintings and sculptures are exhibited throughout the nation including the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art.
When the moon hits your eye ...
Cher, Cage, shoot for the moon and become bright stars

Moonstruck celebrates the joys of life with a wit and passion that is almost nonexistent in the movies. Hell, love is rarely this invigorating in life. As the Rexanne, Moonstruck deliques in romance with such a giddy, insouciant spirit that it makes one fall in love with the idea of falling in love.

Screenwriter John Patrick Shanley plunges us into a familiar, yet wholly original world — a middle class Italian-American neighborhood in Brooklyn. Shanley’s world is teeming with life.

His characters are certifiably eccentric — one can almost smell the manicotti with life. Like

Shanley weds the commonplace with the fantastic to create a sparkling world: a blue-collar bakery worker attends “La Boheme” at the Met, a reserved accountant wears red ruby slippers on a date and a wife brushes off her husband’s philandering with a splendid aphorism — “Men chase women because they fear death.”

The writer’s voice throughout is affectionate and lightly satirical — he both affirms and skewers the rich Italian reverence towards life, family and the impasioned romance that boils the blood and inflames the soul.

Directed by Norman Jewison, the film is a gentle comedy, peppered with unbridled Italian passion — “In Mano and Her Sisters and The Godfather.”

All plot conventions are thrown aside in favor of the unexpected.

For starters, Loreta Casotari (played by Cher) is a successful, independent, 37-year-old accountant who will live at home with her parents. Rose (Olympia Dukakis) and Cosmo (Vincent Gardenia) and her dog-loving grandfather (Deodro Chaliapin).

Loreta’s life is stable, unexhilarated — complete. As the movie opens, she accepts a marriage proposal from Johnny Cammareri (Danny Aiello) simply out of convenience; love enters the equation. But love sneaks up on her.

Johnny must fly to Sicily to propose. As an actress, she will never appear as attractive as when, enveloped in love, she kicks a beer can down the street with her ruby slippers.

Cage’s work is even more deft; Ronny’s bombastic manners could easily resemble overacting. But even as he bellows out his earthy, obscene profanities, Cage transforms into the most tender, aching love, the very kind of love Loreta fears and needs. She now most conform to the idea of love — property vs. passion, control vs. spontaneity and stability vs. true love.

This is no easy resolution, and the greater the challenge for writer Shanley to make an accomplished dialogue and plotting byron.

His screenplay is a marvel, melding the language of the gutter and of the heart. It’s the equivalent of a rapturous aria composed by Berlioz and John Barry.

All of Shanley’s genius could have been butchered by tedious direction. But director Jewison delivers his best work — his touch is light, clever and buoyant. One can almost smell the manicotti in his magic light — it has rarely looked so radiant on film.

Shanley’s superb writing also inspire the actors. The supporting cast absolutely shines, and yet, the two leading actors surpass the surrounding brilliance.

common complaint voiced by critics is that Cher always plays “Cher.” Well, let the buckler’s voice not a hint of “Cher” larks in Loreta. As an actress, she never appears as overacting. But even as he

Poly and Toros rekindle rivalry

1987-88 champs start 1988-89 on down side

By Keith Nunes

The Cal Poly basketball team tonight will take on Cal State Dominguez Hills, a team that tied the Mustangs for the California Collegiate Athletic Association championship last year.

"After tying Dominguez Hills for the championship and then losing to them in the postseason tournament last year, I have to say that a sense of rivalry has developed between the two teams," said the Mustangs' head coach, Steve Beason. "Both teams have similar styles of play and that always makes for an intense game."

Tipoff is 8 p.m. in the Main Gym. Cal Poly will also host Chapman College at 8 p.m. Saturday.

Both Cal Poly and Dominguez Hills are struggling. The Mustangs are 7-3 overall and 0-1 in the CCAA, while the Toros are 6-7 and 0-1.

"Before the polls were released Dominguez Hills was picked to win the league," said Beason. "But the loss of two of their returning starters set them back. (Later) Dominguez Hills was picked to finish seventh."

The Mustangs' biggest problem this season has been consistency. Against Sacramento State two weeks ago they connected on 47 percent of their shots. But against Cal State Bakersfield last weekend they made only 31 percent.

"Inconsistency has hurt us," said Beason. "But it is typical of a team that is learning. We have some players who were very promising last season, but are having trouble adjusting to their new role as starters. I think that once they learn to fit into their new roles we'll see real improvement."

The Mustangs' leading scorers are Mark Shelley, who is averaging 12.3 points per game, and Cathy Noll, who is averaging 10.

"I think the player we need to look out for when we host Dominguez Hills right now is Jeff Gray," said Beason. "Gray, who was the Mustangs' consistent player last season, and we'll need more players to be consistent like him if we're to succeed."
