U.S., E. German top teams meet in volleyball exhibition

By Tricia Higgins
Staff writer

International volleyball competition comes to Cal Poly when the United States Women's Olympic Team and the National Team of East Germany battle it out in Most Gym Monday at 7:30 p.m.

Crag Cummings, Cal Poly assistant volleyball coach, said the team was looking for places to tour. California and San Luis Obispo has responded well to high-level volleyball competition.

"It should be a good match," said Cummings. "The U.S. team has been doing really well. The East Germans have got a lot of talent."

The U.S. team, which has not yet qualified for the Olympics, has played against teams in Mexico and will play in the Southeastern U.S. during the week. The team is looking to gain some world experience and will seek out teams to meet outside the states and are hoping to gain insight as to how the team play together, Cummings said. They first met the Europeans at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs and are playing at other locations, including the European Zone Championships, doing the USSR, current world champions.

The American starting line-up in the match against East Germany will include Laurel Kessel, a senior and four-time All-American, and, outside hitter/middle blocker Karen Kemner, who was named Most Valuable Player at the Zone Championships.

"A team press release, USA head coach Taras Likasek said that he felt the team was really close of age.

"I think our players are approaching their task more seriously," said Likasek. "They can see the light at the end of the tunnel, as far as long-range goals are concerned."

The U.S. team paid the East Germans' transportation costs to the states and are hoping to gain insight as to how the team play together, Cummings said. They first met the Europeans at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs and are playing at other locations, including the 1980 Olympic Bakersfield, Fresno and San Diego.

Tickets for Monday night's game are $6 for students, $8 for non-students, and $12 for reserved "Courtside Elite" seats.

Minority clubs attempt to ease culture shock, join mainstream

By Marianne Biasotti
and John Alexiou

Although Cal Poly isn't a cultural mecca, it does manage to boast the highest retention rate of minority students in the CSU system. Hispanic and Afro-American clubs actively recruit new students, develop job networks for their members as well as participate in social activities, but are not a recognized part of Cal Poly's mainstream.

"Since the white environment is so very concentrated here, sometimes it's a surprise and a shock (for minority students)," said Arvarizu. "As a minority student, you should come here and face reality—that's the best education."

Arvarizu said the reality is that different people will have to learn to live together.

"Eventually they're going to have to fight the Angles, and the sooner the better," she said. "In the professional field they will have to, so they might as well go do it while students.

"The answer, however, isn't assimilation, but acceptance," she said. Acceptance seems to be a major part of choosing a living environment and one of the main reasons minority students don't choose Cal Poly.

"They'll go to a CSU school with a more supportive environment," said Pezo-Silva. "CSU schools such as Dominguez Hills and Los Angeles are the top two campuses in ethnic representation."

Why do so many minority clubs actively recruit potential students to receive their education at Cal Poly instead of a school with more minorities?

"This is a competitive school," said Keith Walton, regional chair for the National Society of Black Engineers. "If you want to be employable I suggest Cal Poly, one of the highest employable schools in the CSU system."

Craig Atkins, a third-year Afro-American architecture student, could have gone to almost any university but chose Cal Poly because it gave him the best education at a low cost.

"The SAS program sold me on Cal Poly when I came to visit," said Atkins. He explained how SAS students took him to classes and Farmer's Market, and housed him overnight.

Although Atkins was successfully recruited by SAS, others feel that much more needs to be done to attract minorities. Some feel Cal Poly does not recruit to the right schools and that Afro-American students haven't been exposed to Cal Poly.

Maria Arvarizu, SAS outreach coordinator and a 1986 business education graduate from Cal Poly, encourages minority students to consider this university, although her own transition to Cal Poly was difficult. That transition was an experience she feels more students need to have in this society.

"We settle for a school of lesser quality which is not as well known when you can go here," said Arvarizu. "As a minority student, you should come here and face reality—that's the best education."

Arvarizu said the reality is that different people will have to learn to live together.

"Eventually they have to learn to fight the Angles, and the sooner the better," she said. "In the professional field they will have to, so they might as well do it while students.

Boy, oh boy. The end of another cerebrum-fried year. And the freshmen are looking more and more like seventh graders, mainly because a lot of them are that age these days. But they've got a while to go yet. The attention of the day now focuses on the black caps and gowns that will file into Mustang Stadium next Saturday. For these spring '88 graduates, it's the end of the road — or maybe 15 years. It's a big accomplishment, especially in light of the racehorse-paced quarter system and Avila Beach a bike ride away. A lot of these students worked on the side, or rather, put school in the backseat, to keep the macaroni and cheese on the table. Ah, the life of a student. If things got more dynamic and time-consuming throughout life, Education is perhaps the most important assurance of a secure world future and college future. Education is perhaps the most important assurance of a secure world future and college future. After a moving rendition of Pomp and Circumstance, the graduates are the examples — and the heralds — of that assurance of a secure world future.

Congratulations!

The reign of terror finally ends

That's my favorite time of the year. No school, no more books, no more teachers' dirty looks. It's summer, and now I can start slowly wrecking my apartment.

This is my way of saying "thank you" to my esteemed landlord, Farrel Smyth, the original ham 'n' cheese crossaints of the San Luis Obispo magtoplant. That's fine, but whoa Nelly Lord, they're far from the best.

But how could I resentment them? They're awful busy down there managing 500 units all on their own. So when you've got major complexes like Cedar Creek, Pine Creek or Pine Sol on your mind, it's hard to remember that you also manage little dunghees — such as mine. I call it "home." When I moved in last September, still full of dormitory optimism and sophomore chutzpah, my very first real apartment sounded semi-keem. No more R.A.'s roasting the halls in search of that bottle of beer or that noisy stereo. No more living in a brick coffin. No more food that looks and tastes like a mutant social disease. This was mine, not affiliated with the CSU. And cheaper than the dorms at $170/month.

But hopes soon began to wither. The key didn't work. An outside railing was wrecked. A bathroom door looked like it had been hacked through it and hastily Krazy Glued it back together. Promised furniture was nowhere to be found.

So my roommate went to the rental office to practice his primal screams. Unfortunately, the secretary was around and she was ready to claw your face in. "I'm TIRED of being treated like meat by you people!" Sir, if you'll just CALM DOWN we can talk about this in a civil way!"

On Tuesday, the residents have the opportunity to exercise the right guaranteed us, not a privilege granted by the oil companies. Whether or not you feel offshore oil will make us less independent on foreign imports, environmental questions have to be answered. Nitrous oxide levels in the South County are near pollution-control limits already. The offshore oil platform would have to generate approximately 3,500 tons of these pollutants, the equivalent of 15,000,000-20,000 cars. The offshore processing plant will be placed in the ecologically sensitive Nipomo Dunes. A bit in the works of being protected by Shell Oil. In Louisiana, an oil refinery injured several people and caused the evacuation of an entire city. Shell Oil would like us to become our corporate neighbor. Graduation greed

Editor — The letter on the buying and selling of graduation tickets was incredibly funny and full of ridiculous assumptions. The writers found the practice "unethical and immoral," but according to who? Should I follow other people's rules? Do the writers (or the itself) have the right to tell me what to do with my property? Should the writer be able to use force in order to impose her morality on me? The writer attempts to contact the police, since government enforcements operate only through the use of force.

She asks us to put our greed aside, but what is greed? Good tickets can be defined as wanting what is unearned, not wanting. Don't worry, and the cause of this greed is, perhaps, a right arm and legging, and the price of a seat the day before or the day after. The point is, what is worth nothing. To others, it is worth a right arm and legging. We do know that the price of a seat the day before or the day after should be, in my interpretation, close to zero. Let the market decide what a seat is worth. Only the will of governments can set prices! People will complain. People will buy tickets, then sell the tickets, then sell the tickets again, and so on. The market decides what a seat is worth. Please consider and give you — away. (Fill in the blank, desk, graduation tickets, etc.) I had to pay $20 per ticket to get into the graduation ceremony. "The IRS has $3 million in un-collected refund checks because post offices must return them," Plante said. "Mad students call us and want to know what happened to their refund checks."

Some students call the post office to leave a forwarding address over the phone, Plante said. "We need something signed by the student or the card isn't valid," he said.

Students who move to another location in the city without notifying the post office face the same problems as those who leave for the summer, Plante said.

"We are required to make every effort to deliver the mail," Plante said. "The only way deliverers really know if someone's living (at the mailing address) is if their name is on the box."

According to a public service announcement released last week by the post office, the names of all persons receiving mail through mailboxes must appear on the outside of the box. If this is not done, mail will be delayed, not delivered at all or lost, the post office said.

Dundee II uses one cliche after another

By Neil Farrell, Staff Writer

n ichard J. "Crocodile" Dundee is back and he's badder than ever. Well almost. In Paul Hogan's resurrection of his popular character the served as writer and producer this time out is a fun and light comedy that unfortunately gets bogged down with cliches and forced jokes. This sequel suffers from dullness.

The movie joins Dundee living in New York with his girlfriend Sue Charlton, played by Liz Kozlowski. He is restless, and homesick, and when Charlton asks him about it he says he'd like to find a job. Crocodile Dundee job hunting in New York would have good comedic possibilities, but isn't explored enough.

Dundee's friend, Bad Bad Leroy Brown, is introduced at Dundee's favorite bar and is portrayed as the "cool black dude." We find that he really isn't bad at all and sells stationery store, Cliche.

The movie switches to the jungles of South America where Charlton's ex-husband is shown photographing a drug lord executing a man. The ex-husband drags Dundee and Charlton into the mess by mailing her the film. He is then murdered by the bad guys, Cliche.

Charlton is then kidnapped by the drug smugglers and held for ransom: the return of the film. Naturally Dundee can't tell the police for fear his girlfriend will die, Cliche.

Now enter the bumbling DEA agent, one of whom is surprised in the bathroom by Dundee. This produces a big laugh when Dundee holds a big, mean looking man, knife to the agent's private parts, threatening him with castration if he doesn't talk.

Dundee then meets with a thug in the subway and escapes by virtue of a pair of Japanese tourists who mistake him for Clint Eastwood. The punchline comes in the cliche language movies have pinned on the Japanese: "C'mon Eastwood." Cliche.

Dundee is then attacked in his own apartment by another bonehead thug who is forced to tell where Charlton is being held. Now with the help of Leroy Brown and a local punk gang, Dundee sets out to rescue his Carys and she is then kidnapped by the bad guys. Cliche.

Dundee decides the only place they can be safe is back in Australia. Off they go and the usual bad guys follow. Never mind running from the law, this thing is personal now. But Dundee is on his own turf and despite being outnumbered and out-gunned, he fights well.

There are only two deaths in the movie, much to Hogan's credit as writer. It would have been easy for Dundee to cut the throats of every bad guy but instead he ties them up and has Charlton guard them with an empty gun. Cliche.

Dundee gets help from his mates the Aborigines. These guys are great. It's funny to see these primitive looking, filthy, not to mention ugly people speaking perfect English. The one good joke by the Aborigines is about eating the homeless thugs, but that too in a cliche.

This movie lacks the originality and charm of the first. But this will be a successful movie, as evidenced by its $29 million take over the Memorial Day weekend, but isn't worth the $2 admission price of local theaters. It would be better to wait for the inevitable release on video tape. Then at least the $5 could include a six-pack of beer. Crocodile Dundee would probably agree to that.

Lazy Snail pokes local music scene to action

By Alison Skratl, Staff Writer

Though frequently teamed with KCPR to promote its gigs, the organization is not financially linked to the radio station. The two are usually teamed because the alternative bands that are booked by Lazy Snail are the ones played on KCPR.

"The people who go to the shows are the people who listen to KCPR," said Sparks.

KCPR Music Director Bruce Flohr appreciates Lazy Snail.

"Lazy Snail is taking the pressure off of KCPR," said Flohr. "Now we don't have to be a concert promoter (making all the arrangements), we can just promote concerts. Lazy Snail takes the financial risks; a radio station shouldn't have to take.

"It's a symbiotic relationship," said Flohr. "It's made people realize that you can take a chance (in the promoting business) and still be successful."

But the alternative music scene in the area is finite. When planning concerts, said Sparks, one has to be careful not to exhaust that audience and must also take into account important school dates, like vacations and finals.

Bookings of which Lazy Snail is most proud include the Meat Puppets, Camper Van Beethoven and House of Freaks.

Business majors could learn a lesson from these liberal arts students. Their self-made company books the bands and the facilities, arranges for payment and collects all the money at the door. Bars don't require a fee for bands, so the only costs for most of the shows are the bands' fee and food bills.

But not all of their attempts are successful. In the beginning, said Harmon, there was a lot of money "coming out of our own pockets." Their largest show, the Meat Puppets at the Central Coast Theaters, whose budget was $3,500, didn't go over as big as was hoped. And they had a Wire Train concert canceled by the city of Pismo Beach one week before it was to occur because of security problems.

However, said Flohr, "for every three shows one usually fails." But their record for successful concerts far out-distances ASI Concerts.

"We do everything ASI can do, but better," said Harmon. "We take bands that ASI can't afford to do," said Sparks, adding that smaller bands wouldn't be worth ASI's time because of the huge costs they must pay due to insurance, security and facilities.

"Whatever we do, we do it right," Sparks said. He said their experience and the fact that they don't do this exclusively for money gives them the edge over other groups who try and sell air time.

Sparks cited SAE's Red Party show as an example of what can go wrong if inexperienced people try to put on a concert. But he does encourage fraternities and the Band ready to say sayonara

By Jenny Lampman, Staff Writer

The Cal Poly Symphonic Band has been invited by the Japanese Band Directors Association to Japan for a 14-day concert tour. Sixty-three members of the band will be leaving June 14 to play concerts and sightsee through the Japanese cities of Tokyo, Moka City, Kyoto, Tenri, Tui City, Kanazawa, Matsuto and Hamamatsu City.

Through two previous international tours to Switzerland and Austria and a close association with the World Association for Symphonic Bands and Ensembles, the Cal Poly Symphonic Band received the official invitation last June.

"Each year the association invites one or two American bands to Japan. Last year they invited Ohio State University and Yale University. That's the level of musical standards of this," said William Johnson, conductor of the band and Cal Poly music professor.

A typical day on the tour may include a Bullet Train ride, a visit to a shrine, a noon concert, a joint rehearsal with a Japanese band and an evening concert, said Johnson.

In return for the band's performances, all meals and housing will be provided for. "Basically all we have to do is get there. It's a special, incredible dual purpose, said Johnson: to say thanks to all those who contributed to the tour and goodbye to the graduates in the band."

"It was a big decision to accept the invitation because we haven't spent a hard year fund raising," said Rob Bertini, personal director and French horn player of the band. Johnson believes the band is the finest it has been in the last 22 years since he's been at Cal Poly. "Our invitation was not political, we sent tapes for the audition. It was because we are a fine band," said Johnson.

Most of the bands invited for the tour are from concert, music degree programs. Members of the Cal Poly Symphonic Band come from all majors, said Johnson.

On June 10, the band performs a Sayonara Concert in Chumash Auditorium. The concert has a dual purpose, said Johnson: to say thanks to all those who contributed to the tour and goodbye to the graduates in the band.

The concerts that will be performed in Japan.

Within the last year, the band has been busy raising the $120,000 required for the trip. Through phone-a-thons, a band marathon and raffles, the members have raised $117,000 and hope to have the balance by the end of the week. "We've had so many great people contributing, moms and dads of the students, service organizations in the hometowns of the students and we've even had students who have no association with the band contributing $20, $30, $40," said Johnson.

"Our invitation was not political, we sent tapes for the audition. It was because we are a fine band," said Johnson.

The best there is...for now

People watching at the U.V. Plaza wins again.

If you would rather stay in town, then try a movie or some shopping. The Fremont was voted the best theater. However, if you go there and have a craving for popcorn, you're in trouble because the best popcorn is down the street at the Drive-In Bowl Theatre.

Realizing the usual budget limitations, shopping in certain stores may be prohibited. That's OK, because Second Time Around and Full Circle hold for the best thrift-shops and rummage sales that have all the stylish newspaper editors shop there. After your crazy shopping spree, hop up to The Spindle and hang out with the best thrift-shops and rummage sales. This is the best place for hanging out with friends.

If you're an early bird, though, fast-paced billiards and 25-cent beers await you at Mustang Tavern during the town's finest happy hour.

Weekend Plans

Once your 25-cent beer hangover goes away, there's another problem. With so many activities to choose from, any given weekend, where does one start? Maybe we can help. First, start with an early morning jog (in this case, maybe early afternoon would be better) through Poly Canyon. Since this is the favorite route for avid marathoners, you probably won't be alone.

At this point, a nice relaxing drive to the beach would do you right. If at all possible, cruise across See Canyon Road on the way to Avila Beach and you'll see the most treacherous lane before arriving at the best beach. If a day at Avila doesn't fulfill your hunger for adventure and sun, then pack a picnic, drive to Montana Circle tied for the best parking space of President Baker's parking zone. If you're in a big enough hurry there's always the infamous parking space of President Baker, voted most illegal for two consecutive years. Due to the parking situation at Cal Poly and the fact that you had such a wild weekend, you now have the two most popular excuses for being late to class: "I couldn't find a place to park," and "I'm really hung over."

Depending on how desperate you are and how many times you've already used these excuses, you could try the worst line: "I forgot I had class today."

By Tuesday or Wednesday you're back in the school groove and ready to study, or at least ease your guilt by hanging out in the library. Farm Boy's Restaurant (call it what you will) seems to be the best study spot, while the two best floors of the library are the second and third.

By Thursday and Friday it's time to slow down and enjoy the presence of your fellow students. The overwhelmingly favorite place to people watch, for the second year straight, is the University Plaza.

— By James Welch

WHERE TO EAT

In a restaurant haven where entrepreneurs live and die by the tastebuds of the town, it is essential that they cater to the hungry student population. For two consecutive years Louisa's Place, The Spindle and F. McLintock's in Shell have designated as the finest this town has to offer. Sixteen of the 25 top finishers have won two years straight and some look as though they may be invincible for years to come. Let's take a look, shall we?

Lunch at the Spindle is the best, as well as hanging out.

If you go there and have a craving for popcorn, you're in trouble because the best popcorn is down the street at the Drive-In Bowl Theatre.

Back To School On Monday

Wake Up! The weekend's over and you'll have to be late for class. Jump in the car, zoom to school and make the best parking space. Unfortunately, according to the survey, it happens to be either a staff parking space or a handicap zone. If you're in a big enough hurry there's always the infamous parking space of President Baker, voted most illegal for two consecutive years. — By James Welch

The polls of what's popular at Poly have been prepared again. Pupils have pulled together to pick the places they prefer the most. From poppers to produce to picnic spots, more than 100 people took part in answering the problem of what is the "Best O'SLO."

After an entire week of deep, meaningful research and long sleepless nights, the Mustang Daily staff has compiled the results of what you, the readers, have designated as the finest this town has to offer. Sixteen of the 25 top finishers have won for two years straight and some look as though they may be invincible for years to come. Let's take a look, shall we?

Due to the parking situation at Cal Poly and the fact that you had such a wild weekend, you now have the two most popular excuses for being late to class: "I couldn't find a place to park," and "I'm really hung over."

By Tuesday or Wednesday you're back in the school groove and ready to study, or at least ease your guilt by hanging out in the library. Farm Boy's Restaurant (call it what you will) seems to be the best study spot, while the two best floors of the library are the second and third.

By Thursday and Friday it's time to slow down and enjoy the presence of your fellow students. The overwhelmingly favorite place to people watch, for the second year straight, is the University Plaza.

Lunch at the Spindle is the best, as well as hanging out.

Wake Up! The weekend's over and you'll have to be late for class. Jump in the car, zoom to school and make the best parking space. Unfortunately, according to the survey, it happens to be either a staff parking space or a handicap zone. If you're in a big enough hurry there's always the infamous parking space of President Baker, voted most illegal for two consecutive years. Money seems to be the driving force behind many musicians and bands. They'll take any gig that pays. Not so for Cal Poly student Steve Harmon. For him it's the opportunity to express his feelings that motivates his music.

Harmon fronts the local band Back in Five which plays parties and various clubs in the area. Though relatively new, they've been together for a year and a half, Harmon said the band is starting to come together as musicians.

"At first we didn't consider ourselves musicians," Harmon said.

"Our guitarist, Brent Gonzales, and I felt like our songs were born of anger and that music was a vent for that anger." Harmon hooked up with a band called Image, that band experienced personnel problems with its drummer and disbanded. Image played a few club dates including an opening set for Twinkie Defense at The Darkroom in San Luis Obispo. The members of Image later reformed into Back in Five and started writing songs.

"We changed from the past to a more pleasant style than before," Harmon said. "We changed to a less is more concept." Harmon said his lyrics are meant to express emotions gathered from the world around him. Events that take place across the world, like apartheid in South Africa, come through in his writing.

"We don't sit down and divide the songs into bars and phrases. We use a feeling or conviction of an idea to express the notion of the moment," Harmon said.

"We want to say something, we want to talk about the big picture, timeless things." Back in Five has recorded a five song tape that Harmon says he is pleased with despite the hassles of studio work in Los Angeles. He said that the tape took a total of five days, six hours a day, spread over three months to finish. Harmon said the band chose from about 30 original songs narrowing it down to the five best.

The most pressure was on the drummer working with a drum engineer, and laying down all drum tracks in one six-hour day.

The band has paid more than $200 in publishing and copying the tape and is supposed to sell them, but Harmon said he gives his copies away. There are about 40 in circulation across the Central Coast, according to Harmon.

Harmon said the band has has trouble getting together to rehearse because he is the only member living in San Luis Obispo and going to Cal Poly.

"The other band members live in Lompoc, and its a real hassle trying to practice. We don't get burned out though. On the weekends we're ready to play, or write songs. If you think of it as a job it gets monotonous." Harmon takes a different approach when considering how to measure success, choosing to gauge it by the level of expression he's able to achieve. He doesn't place playing clubs very high on the priority list but admits that the feeling of the live crowd is exciting.

"To us we're already successful. Being able to express ourselves is success," Harmon said.

"For me personally the peak is to express myself, anything else is gravy."
The Cal Poly Band says 'thanks for the support' with its Sayonora Concert June 2 in Chumash Auditorium. The performance features music planned for the band's 1988 Japan Concert Tour. Tickets are $3 for students and $6 for the public.

The Festival Ballet and the Central Coast Jazz Company perform Rock, Rags and Romance, Too June 4 at the Cuesta College Auditorium. The show, which starts at 7:30 p.m., has a variety of styles from salsa jazz to ballroom dancing. Tickets are $6 for students and $8 for the public.

The Central Coast Renaissance Faire takes place June 18-19 at the El Chorro Regional Park between San Luis Obispo and Morro Bay off Highway 1. Featured will be jesters, foods, Lords and Ladies, wenchers, street actors, crafts and much more. Call 549-9260 for more information.

In July, the University Art Gallery in the Dexter Building will feature the works of West German artist Klaus Kammerichs at an installation with photography by Ann Zimmer. The exhibition ends this week.

MUSTANG DAILY... IT’S IN THE BLOOD
Comedian tries to revive MTV casualties
By Kristy Duncan, Special to the Daily

Comedy is serious business for a young rising star on the Central Coast who according to one local comedian, could be the next Jay Leno.

Michael Pace, 29, began his comedy career four and a half years ago with Chicken Lips, an improv group in Davis, and has since worked in clubs throughout California, Texas and the Midwest.

Pace tries to begin his routine with five minutes of current events. Yet, he finds this difficult.

"If you do really current stuff, you're going to lose the audience because half of them don't read," Pace said.

"I'm at the point now where I'd like to start saying things I've heard in the news. But the problem is that the rest of the audience doesn't listen," he said.

"Some people are generation X. They're not going to lose the audience because half of them don't read," Pace said. "But the dice seem to be rolling in his favor. Pace recently finished having his third showcase for Star Search and will possibly appear on the show next season. But he knows the game isn't over yet.

"I'm not sure if people will ever be able to listen to intelligent comedy because attention spans are increasingly diminished by MTV and commercials. The comedy brain is shot by watching poorly scripted shows," Pace said.

"I'm at the point now where I'd like to worry about comedy right now instead of trying to become a household name overnight like Jay Leno," he said. "I don't want to be doing something I don't want to be doing."

MAIL

From page 3 announcement stated. If students forget to leave a forwarding address in San Luis Obispo, they can fill out a change-of-address card with their home post office and receive most of their mail, Plante said. To alleviate some forwarding problems, the post office has delivered change-of-address cards to larger apartment complexes mailboxes, Plante said. "On an average day, we get two or three bags of mail with no forwarding addresses," one postal clerk said. "During the week after finals, we get six or seven bags." Plante said students must remember to file another card when they leave their summer address and return to school. Plante said. That will ensure that their mail will follow them, he said.

said Erskine Frisone, president of the Society of Black Engineers and Scientists. "You have to do it right, like being on time and alert in class. You can't slack off or (other students) will say, 'See?' This is a very big problem on campus.

"The students on campus are tomorrow's leaders — whether black, white, or yellow,' he said. "The fact that educated people see minority students as less qualified scare me — this attitude perpetuates the past. You can't draw conclusions unless you've experienced it.''

"There's an underground racial bias (at Cal Poly),'' said Atkins. 'I always feel I have to prove myself. It helps me work well — if you're the underdog, you have to work twice as hard.'

"Everybody has a social responsibility to learn about each other's cultures,'" said Arvazia. "Learn from each other and live peacefully.'"
