New dean wants to unify School of Liberal Arts

By Carmela Herron
Staff writer

Glenn Irvin, associate vice president for academic affairs and university dean, has recently been appointed interim dean for the School of Liberal Arts and says he is looking forward to an "exciting and challenging" position.

The interim position, which begins Sept. 1 and continues up through the 1988-89 school year, gives him the opportunity to do something different for the university, he said.

He added that his experience as university dean and his education in the liberal arts will be a real advantage to him on the job.

"I know how one school relates to the other — in central administration you see how things work," he said.

Although he's cautious about predicting future needs for the school before he has started, Irvin said he plans to jump in and "work on the most pressing issues" as soon as he does.

One issue he addressed was the need for the school to be more cohesive.

"I'd like the school to start thinking about itself as a school — not just a collection of departments," he said.

Irvin also emphasized the importance for Cal Poly as a polytechnic university — to grow in the liberal arts.

"They're (the liberal arts) fundamental. If you've got a university, your gonna' have the arts and sciences," he said.

In addition, Irvin wants to work on making the school's resource allocations more effective and efficient.

Irvin, a 45-year-old Los Angeles native, joined Cal Poly in January 1986 as vice provost.

He has been responsible for curriculum review, academic program planning, academic policy interpretation and administration.

He earned three degrees in English at Arizona State University and is a former high school English teacher. He was also a member of the literature and languages faculty at East Texas State University from 1978-85.

Irvin will be replacing Jon Ericson, who has been dean of the School of Liberal Arts for more than 17 years, will be moving on to take a leadership role in the university's international education program.

"(Ericson) gave the school the benefit of many good years of service and leadership through some very difficult times and changes," he said.

"For me, part of the interest is where do we go from here — especially through an interim period."

He was named for the position by President Baker upon the recommendation of Vice President for Academic Affairs Malcolm Wilson and a school-wide consultative committee.

Local writer charged with stealing books

By Coleen Bondy
Assistant Managing Editor

Novelist and Academy Award nominee Jerry Gustav Hasford has been charged on two counts of grand theft and 10 counts of possession for books he allegedly stole from the Kennedy and San Luis Obispo County libraries.

A San Luis Obispo storage shed containing about 10,000 books, some stolen from 20-24 libraries, was discovered by university police March 17.

The shed was rented to Hasford, a former Morro Bay resident.

After police investigated, they found that about 800 of the books had been stolen from libraries as far away as London.

Hasford pleaded not guilty to the charges at an arraignment Wednesday. He was released from the San Luis Obispo County Jail on a reduced $87,500 bail.

Hasford wrote the novel that was turned into the movie "Full Metal Jacket." He also collaborated on the screenplay.

Worker claims further Plant Ops problems

By Terry Lightfoot
Staff writer

The prime figure in a protest and petition alleging wastefulness and discrimination in Plant Operations said that he has been the victim of reprisals by the head of the department.

David Jones, a journeyman electrician in plant operations, said that Ed Naretto has used his position as plant director to lash back at him and turn Jones' fellow workers against him.

Jones said that he has received threats from Naretto and has had his pay docked without prior notice. "Naretto said that he was docking my pay because I had ex­hausted my sick leave," Jones said. "Once sick leave is gone any sick days are deducted from your vacation time, not docked from your pay."

Naretto approved those sick days 13 times in the past Jones said.

Jones believes Naretto told co-workers that Jones was reporting infractions committed by them. "I think that Naretto is trying to use that information to divide my co-workers against me. I want everyone to know that the problem is not with my co-workers."

Naretto has not been available in order to respond to any allegations.

The College of Plant Operations administration has begun an investigation into the petition sent to the California State University President Baker upon the recommendation of the College of Plant Operations, said the petition was vague and unclear.

Jones pointed out some specific problems within plant operations. He said that there are electrical lines going to the football stadium that are not used. "The wires were to be used for television hookups and now they aren't used for anything," Jones said.

Jones said that because of faulty steam lines, between 40 and 80 thousand gallons of water are being wasted. "There are smoke alarms in the domes that fall from the ceilings because the adhesive that was used to mount them no longer works."

The administration has said that part of the problem with the lack of minority hires has been a small number of applicants.

Jones said that he has known a lot of people who have applied for jobs and have been turned down.

The majority of minorities work as custodians on the Cal Poly campus. Jones said that you can ask any of them if they want to move up they are being paid by the hour and the answer would be yes.

One of Jones' biggest complaints has been the training programs such as the one he used to move up from a custodial position. "They're (the liberal arts) fundamental. If you've got a university, you gonna' have the arts and sciences," he said.

In addition, Irvin wants to work on making the school's resource allocations more effective and efficient.

Phones to outdate CAR forms

By Karin Holtz
Staff writer

Computer Assisted Registration is soon to be a process of the past as touch-tone registration takes over.

All add-drops for fall quarter will be done by phone the week before school starts. By winter quarter the entire registration process will be done with the new system.

Letter To The Editor

Poly students want off-campus housing

Editor — I am writing in response to Peg Pinard's attack on Cal Poly in her letter on June 2.

Her first inappropriate comment is that Cal Poly doesn't seem to have any more problems than the noisier students at San Jose State University. The reason for this is not because Cal Poly doesn't have a problem — it has one that is quite severe — but because it's a problem that we are more aware of.

The other reason she gives is that we are more concerned with the problems we see. This is true, but I think it is because we are more concerned with the problems that we see.

I think this is true, but I think it is because we are more concerned with the problems that we see.

Pinard also mentions that the students are driven off campus because of the "dry campus." She feels that campus alcohol would be a great help in alleviating this problem.

I think this is true, but I think it is because we are more concerned with the problems that we see.

There isn't a fraternity/sorority row because the structure of the school does not allow it. Even if it was possible, why would the Greek system want to be subject to all the campus board regulations on alcohol and other things?

I think this is true, but I think it is because we are more concerned with the problems that we see.

Pinard also believes that Cal Poly doesn't have a problem because the students are too busy to drink.

I think this is true, but I think it is because we are more concerned with the problems that we see.

It is called an art form, requiring grace and skill. It takes determination and effort, and the students would have to be the ones who work the hardest to see if this is possible.

I think this is true, but I think it is because we are more concerned with the problems that we see.

Beating boxing

A man slouches across a dark alley, unsuccessfully trying to hide his bulk. Bulging muscles threaten to jump out of his shirt, overexposed. He overpowers his prey. In the second story, the other man is beaten to a pulp. No words were spoken — all that can be heard are grunts and groans. The first man is a worthless, paid lowlife, fit to perform this gruesome work. He acts on primal instincts, with a cold, remorseless attitude.

These are the same men our society puts on display, pays millions for, and hero-worships.

People make all kinds of excuses for the "sport" of boxing. It is called an art form, requiring grace and skill. It takes determination and effort, and the students would have to be the ones who work the hardest to see if this is possible.

I think this is true, but I think it is because we are more concerned with the problems that we see.

Certainly the singing was not the only distraction. What was waged with beach balls could be placed in the Guiness Book of World Records for the largest volleyball game ever. Also, a giant human, black wave pulsed in a circle on the field. An airplane towing a graduation ceremony dummy bowed and tipped. The crowd began to sing a traditional graduation song, "If you have any questions, the answers are "No." And then, at one point, the students started to sing the school song, "If you have any questions, the answers are "No.""

Rowdy grads chuck tradition

There's probably no combination in chemistry's table of periodic elements that could produce such a phenomenon. Something just happens when you mix two of 10 years of quarterly ti cule with sound accountants at Cal Poly. Cal Poly takes care of housing problems — whenever it is a problem

I think this is true, but I think it is because we are more concerned with the problems that we see.

G ranted, Cal Poly should be a bit more considerate of people who take time to share their wisdom. The message Alvin Tribelpiece left for the students at Cal Poly was a bit too harsh. But graduation ceremonies are for parents more than anyone else, and despite their precious children's antics on this special day, moms and dads, friends and family, are very proud.

In the words of one woman overlooking the sea of more than 3,000 artfully adorned mortar boards, "It's a good graduation. I've been waiting for it for a long time."

I think this is true, but I think it is because we are more concerned with the problems that we see.

Perhaps a new approach is needed if administrators and families want to see the ceremony of the caliber of Princeton or Yale. But Cal Poly is neither of those schools and probably will never be. Cal Poly students generally do not come from backgrounds that foster perfect table manners. Nor do they commonly take part in stately fraternal ceremonies. Just like John Madden, He's a Cal Poly graduate.

Cal Poly is unique in another way. It is not a four-year school. Four years seem to be the ceiling for same behavior. Should Cal Poly students complete their undergraduate work in four years they would not be so joy filled and over zealous upon their release. Perhaps then, the solution to a same, starch-collar commencement is in doing away with senior projects. It is that to ask?

Floyd Jones used to be editor of Mustang Daily but is now finishing his senior project and planning to embark on a film career, hoping to fill the shoes, and house doors, of the late Divine.
Nixon library gets approval from city and ex-president

YORBA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — The $25 million Nixon library will be a classic building that will blend with the surrounding neighborhood, according to the latest plans. The Richard M. Nixon Presidential Library cleared two hurdles Tuesday with City Council approval of the environmental report for the project and designation of the ex-president’s adjacent homestead as a historic site.

There was no public opposition or debate of the plans by Langdon Wilson Mumper, a Los Angeles-based architectural firm. The plans call for a classic concrete and brick, U-shaped building with a red tile roof to be built next to the wood frame house on Yorba Linda Boulevard where the former president was born.

The library will be surrounded by gardens, a reflective pool, fountains and 290 parking spaces. The plans for the 84,500 square-foot, one-story complex are scheduled for review by the city’s Planning Commission next week. Nixon, 75, already has approved final details and is expected to attend a November groundbreaking. The library should open in June 1989.

Drought affecting farmers more than consumer prices

WASHINGTON (AP) — The drought is bearing down hard on farmers, but Agriculture Department experts say consumers won’t feel much of the pressure as they do their grocery shopping this year.

“If the drought continues, food prices will rise, but the increases are likely to be moderate,” a senior USDA economist said Tuesday. “The effects of such higher food prices on the overall rate of inflation would be negligible.”

Although the forecast will be revised next month, a preliminary analysis shows that 1988 food prices may rise by an average of 3 percent to 5 percent, the report said. Until the drought, USDA economists predicted the increase would be in the range of 2 percent to 4 percent, compared with a 4.1 percent gain in 1987.

The report was prepared by Assistant Secretary for Economics Edwin M. Wilson, who acknowledged that “much of the nation’s cropland has been gripped by a searing drought which threatens to imperil this summer’s crop harvests.”

Chinese leader says market styled economy in trouble

BEIJING (AP) — Senior leader Deng Xiaoping confidently assessed his own economic policies Wednesday while condemning as “leftist mistakes” those followed by Mao Tse-tung for two decades, an official report said.

The Xinhua News Agency said Deng acknowledged that his market-style economic reforms face serious problems, including inflation and wage inequities that have caused widespread discontent. He said the problems will take five or six years to resolve.

But in a meeting with visiting Ethiopian President Mengistu Haile Mariam, Deng criticized China’s policies from 1957-76 for “bringing the country to a virtual standstill,” Xinhua said.

Deng apparently did not mention Mao by name. Mao died in 1976 after 27 years as the most powerful man in Communist China.

Criticism of Mao’s 1957 drive to form huge communes and the 1966-76 radical leftist Cultural Revolution have become routine under Deng, twice purged by Mao.
Artist donates $300 to UU Galerie for next Poly Royal

By Brenda Suppanz

Cal Poly's University Union
Galerie recently received a $300 donation from a Russian-born artist for next year's second annual university-wide Poly Royal Student Art Exhibition.

Jeanne La Barbera, the Galerie's director, said Eugene Garson, who now lives in San Francisco, contributed the money for the second year in a row to encourage student artists. Garson decided to donate the money when he attended a Cal Poly art exhibition last April. After seeing the work that the students were capable of producing, La Barbera said "he wanted to do something.

"We were so touched to have an artist who doesn't even live in the area to be supportive of the program," she said.

The Galerie plans to display the work of Garson and two other Russian artists. La Barbera said, in two or three years.

La Barbera is also looking forward to the exhibitions lined up for the coming summer and fall quarters.

"Silhouettes in Living Color," a combination painting and performance piece, will be featured from July 20 to August 6. Explaining that there will be a backdrop of watercolor paintings, La Barbera said that the exhibit will be designed like a theater, with an actor performing in front of a multi-sided backdrop.

Another highlight for the summer, La Barbera said, is an exhibit made by disabled adults.

The Galerie usually holds the show, "From the Heart," once a year, she said, adding that it typically sells out.

Ex-Foundation manager dies

SAN LUIS OBISPO - A retired administrator and former member of the faculty at Cal Poly died on Tuesday, June 14 at his home in Auburn.

Gene E. Brendlin, who had been ill and recently hospitalized, joined the university as a member of the farm management department faculty in 1950 and over the next three years was also involved in the supervision of student agricultural teachers.

In 1953, he became manager of the Cal Poly Foundation, the non-profit auxiliary that operates the university's bookstore, as well as other campus services. He continued in that position until his retirement in 1971.

A native of Paso Robles, where he was born in 1911, Brendlin attended high school in Hanford and Salinas, and then completed his bachelor's degree at UC Davis in 1934.

Brendlin began a career in agricultural education the following year that continued into the mid 1940s, when he left teaching for several years and owned farming operations in southern San Luis Obispo County.

Brendlin's survivors include his wife, Lois; a son, Donald, who lives in Marysville; four grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren.

The family suggests that those who wish to make memorial contributions send them to the charity of their choice.

Local ‘fighter’ cares for severely disabled despite state

By Christine Kohn

Sjany DeGroot is a fighter. She fights to keep her “babies” alive and she fights the state. Her “babies,” as she calls them, are severely disabled toddlers and critically ill infants.

The former French Hospital nurse has operated an intensive care nursery since 1977. She cares for 12 children in her San Luis Obispo home, making it among the very few intensive care nurseries in California.

DeGroot, a Holland native, first made news in 1981 when she was charged with murder after her 5-year-old deaf, blind and mentally retarded girl she was caring for died in a hospital. She fought the case for four years.

She argued that the girl’s physical and emotional health could not tolerate the rigors of attending school outside the DeGroot home, but state officials placed the child elsewhere.

Although DeGroot says she and the state are at a cease-fire for the moment, another battle could occur in the future.

DeGroot plans to open a temporary care facility for critically ill infants.

“If the social service says no, I will fight,” she said.

Through the years her greatest struggle has been the state’s... from people who do not understand that the kids aren’t normal disabled kids,” she said.

“There are all kinds of homes, but there are no homes for these kids, they’re too sick.”

“Social service licensed me as a group home. A group home is for older kids who are alcohol and drug dependent.”

The requirements for a group home are not what I do. According to group home requirements, I can’t have my kids in the park. I can’t walk them right outside.

DeGroot is helped by her husband, who is an engineer, and three full-time aides, in caring for the 12 children, who range from 10 months to 11 years old.

The state pays for the children’s room and board, but any other money comes from her husband’s paycheck, said DeGroot.

“We are not making money,” she said. “But we can live. I can go to the grocery store and buy what I want, and I can buy toys for the kids.”

Without the DeGroot home, most of the children would be placed in acute care hospitals. But state hospitals do not provide the home the children need, said DeGroot.

“They have family here. At night my husband and I sit by the TV and all the babies are on the floor. And we play with them... it’s a real home,” said DeGroot.

“At the state hospital, they have people that come in and carry them around from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. They go to bed, and that’s it.”

Babies should stay in a home at least until they are 10 years old, DeGroot said. After that, the kids get too big and heavy. Their first child is going to the state hospital this week, she said.

“There is nothing more we can do for her.

Over the years DeGroot said she has cared for 66 children. Twenty of them have died, but others have recovered and gone home.

“We have one group of kids that has been here for a long time. They need a lot of nursing care but they are stable,” she said. “But the babies are still hanging on.

It’s hard when a child dies or goes home. “I become attached to the children. We’re not supposed to, but some of them stay 10 years here,” she said.

“We have a little baby who’s 10 months. He’s sick but he smiles and smiles. You know he can hear.”

DeGroot will continue to fight for her babies, she said, and will follow the words that are on the wall in the nursery: “It matters not how long I live, but how.”

How to fight tickets

SLO attorney says if you’re going to court, be prepared

By Michelle Di Simone

“Have you ever been issued a traffic ticket?” Jacobson asked.

If so, you probably noticed your insurance rates rose abruptly, or you may have even lost your license. What are your choices?

You can either grind and pay or fight back.

“The first rule of the road says ‘always fight a ticket,’” said attorney Gregory Jacobson, who has an office on Palm Street.

“But it’s imperative if you’re going to fight a ticket that you make the commitment to show up when you say you’re going to do it,” he added.

The biggest problem with people fighting traffic tickets, Jacobson said, is that they either don’t report to court on their scheduled dates, or they don’t have any knowledge of the system.

“You must be prepared to be inconvenienced by going to court twice,” he said.

“There is a 20 to 25 percent chance that the officer won’t be there or won’t remember the ticket. Either way, you would probably win.”

Jacobson said that the most important things to know when battling a ticket are how the court system works, and what your rights are.

“Have the facts together and be prepared,” he said.

Jeffry C. Radding, Jacobson’s associate, said that preparation and presentation of facts is key to winning.

“First of all, know what you’re charged with and what the language of the statute is. Secondly, know what your defense is — outline the case so that when you go to court you have a planned defense.

“Once you have your defense, you can decide what evidence you will need,” Radding said. The evidence can include witness testimonials, diagrams, pictures, or other cases such as precedents, he said.

Joan Borraccino, law librarian at the San Luis Obispo County Government Center on Monterey Street, said the best advice she knows of is a book entitled “Fight Your Ticket — Legal Strategies to Handle Speeding, Radar, Drunk Driving, License Suspension and Appeals,” by attorney David W. Brown. “The book is available in the Cal Poly law library.”

“I suggest trying the book before anything else,” Borraccino said. “It’s mostly on the type of charge.”

“Secondly, understand English, and much easier to understand than the code books.”

She said that violations can be looked up in the vehicle code or civil code, depending on the exact citation, but that the code books say nothing about defense.

County Supervisor of Traffic Ginny Radding said that defendants can get information from the municipal court at the government center.

“We have pamphlets available to assist people step-by-step,” she said.

Deciding whether or not to seek legal counsel is another issue faced when fighting a ticket.

“It’s generally better to get the counsel,” Jacobson said, “but it depends mostly on the type of charge.”

He said that misdemeanor and felony charges should be handled by an attorney, regardless of the situation.

“You can’t win every case, obviously. But there are a lot of things an attorney can do to minimise the impact, including a reduced sentence or probation,” Jacobson said.

“It really depends on the person’s record and financial situation,” he added.

There is, however, a negative side to fighting tickets, Radding said.

“If you choose to fight a ticket and lose, you can end up paying more in attorney’s fees than the original bail would have cost,” he said. “And if the judge doesn’t believe you, he can increase the fines or add a jail sentence.”

Whatever happens,” Jacobson said, “always plead not guilty. Tell the judge you want to talk to an attorney first.”

This gives you a chance to seek free legal counsel and to decide whether to hire an attorney or represent yourself, he said.

“It’s critical to be honest. A dishonest client will be hurt worse,” Jacobson said.

“Remember the procedures of burden of proof,” Radding said. “The prosecution must prove you guilty — you don’t have to prove you’re innocent.”

Students start bedroom business

By Kelley Cummins

Most students go to college to prepare to work in the outside world, but two Cal Poly students have jumped the gun and started their own business.

Jeff Reynolds, 22, and Jeb Thornburg, 21, have started Genesport, which stands for the generation of ideas and alternatives in sports marketing. "Basically, we act as a liaison between a sporting event and a corporation," said Thornburg.

Reynolds explained that this type of business is in demand. "The cost of buying TV commercials during a sporting event is outrageous, and most people tune out commercials anyway. But if a company sponsors an event it gets advertising with banners, logos and anything else we decide on." Genesport is an outgrowth of Reynolds' experiences with the Firestone Wheelmen. Thornburg and Reynolds, leaders of the club, are in charge of getting sponsors for the cycling team.

Currently, the business partners have a home occupation permit and are working out of Reynolds' bedroom.

Reynolds said each call is handled professionally. "If American Express calls, I don't want them to think it's two guys working out of a bedroom. They think we're a big company." The biggest job they have accomplished is the Firestone United States Collegiate Cycling Championships, held May 21-22.

American Express co-sponsored the event. "American Express paid us and in return they received radio commercials, banners, publicity from the race announcers, and tons of people filled out their credit card applications," said Reynolds.

Reynolds said there is no shortage of clients, but potential clients are sometimes wary of his and Thornburg's youth. Reynolds said that in front of clients they try to make their presentations as professional as possible by wearing suits and handing out written information.

Even though they try to be prepared, awkward situations still arise, Reynolds said. "One such time was when Reynolds contacted Firestone, the malt beverage company. The only link to the company he had was the telephone number of a cousin of the owner. "I called her, and she was really rude and said, 'what are you doing calling me at home?' And boom, I had to sell her right away," Reynolds said.

Firestone became the major sponsor for the National Championships. Both agree that school has helped them begin Genesport. "Most of their education has been out of the classroom. School teaches you to be a follower. To be successful in business you've got to be a leader," Thornburg said.

Reynolds said that marketing courses have helped but that the business world is different. "People talk out of both sides of their mouth. They'll say, 'yes I will' and 'no I won't' just to get rid of you. That's why follow up is so important." Both said they are not sure how successful Genesport will be, but they plan to stick with it for the next couple of years. "Our key is to evaluate what we've done, and how we can do better. If we can learn from our past, then we'll do better in the future. We've got to think big," said Thornburg.

system shouldn't be judged by the fall semester because it's not a true test of its abilities.

Students will still be experiencing the after-effects of CAR, he added.

Moons said the system will eliminate the problem of running back and forth to classes in hopes of adding at the beginning of the quarter.

The new system is a continuous ad-drop process, Moons said.

"Students will know right away whether they got their classes when they hang up the phone, as opposed to CAR, when they don't know until they get their study lists.

Moons, who did a trial run with the system, said the system is easy, with simple steps.

Students will be assigned a time period, according to priority when they may call.
By calling the phone number, they will be hooked up to the main computer system on campus which contains the software. They will respond to directions from a broken monotone male voice by punching in numbers to request the classes they want.

Students need to be prepared with class alternatives when they call the computer, Moons said.
"If you don't come up with your next class option within a certain amount of time the phone may cut you off."

Gerald Panches, registrar, said certain policies for the system are still being worked out. He doesn't know how priority will be worked, but said he hopes it will fit with an existing priority registration.

Moons said he is not sure whether students will be able to add once the quarter starts, but thinks it is unlikely. He also said a fee collection process has yet to be worked out.

Moons is positive about the small class registration system because he said it has been successfully implemented at other schools including Arizona State and Brigham Young University.

Although the new system will have many positive effects, Moons said students should not expect it to solve all registration problems.
"It's not going to do away with our problem with not having enough classes. You're still going to have the problem of not having enough English classes and not enough G.E. classes."

"It's just easing the registration process, not increasing the classes," he said.

individuals who would come forward and support him if they weren't afraid of losing their jobs.

"My only regret is that I didn't get involved earlier," he said.

Almost 2,000 UCSB students want war class

SANTA BARBARA (AP) — Growing interest in the Vietnam War has been up with students at the University of California, Santa Barbara, where the most popular class on campus looks at the war's impact on American culture.

"We're teaching the Vietnam generation," said Professor Walter Capps. "These students were born when the war was raging, and they want to know what for.

Nearly 2,000 students signed up for the class last fall but enrollment was limited to 900 after Capps refused to teach it in the football stadium, the only place big enough to accommodate that many students.

"This has been happening since I started the class three years ago," he said. "It's by far the most popular class on campus."

According to the Indochina Institute at Virginia's George Mason University, which specializes in Vietnam era material, there are now 237 classes on the war being taught on U.S. college campuses. That's more than double what it was three years ago.

The interest in Vietnam is enormous," institute director Marney Hawkins said. "Collegiate students have a real hunger to learn about it and understand Vietnam's impact.

Some educational experts believe a slew of recent movies about the Vietnam experience, including the Academy Award-winning "Platoon" and "Full Metal Jacket," likely contributed to the sudden campus fever.
