Credit union analyzes Poly for potential service location

By Brenda Suppanz

A prospective credit union is analyzing the faculty, staff and student market at Cal Poly, temporarily slowing plans for a credit union on campus. A credit union could also replace the Foundation cashier when it moves to the Foundation building in January 1990.

The state cashier, in the Administration Building, handles state fees, like parking and registration. The Foundation cashier, on the other hand, is located in the University Union and handles general transactions.

"We'd really like to move ahead (on the credit union idea) if they're interested," said ASI President Tom Lebens. He said the credit union, which he declined to name, is interested in leasing space in the UU, possibly in the offices that will be left vacant by the Foundation cashier.

Lebens told Cal Poly President Warren J. Baker Monday to discuss the credit union's progress.

"It's in the offices that will be emptied," Lebens said.

Over the summer the prospective credit union did a survey through the mail to see how many faculty members would be interested in using a credit union on campus.

"They are doing a market study," Lebens said, which is why their decision is on hold right now.

Another hold-up could take place if the credit union decides to do the same type of study with students.

"They will be here in the beginning of November to try to gain student membership," Lebens said.

A credit union representative will be coming at the end of the month to see the possible UU location. One concern is that the space now used by the Foundation cashier may be too small to set up a credit union in.

A possible solution for this would be to lease additional space to the union.

The building the credit union under consideration has all the services of a bank, plus the added function of enabling students and faculty to have saving and checking accounts.

Beer cans used to insulate house

By Laura Fleischer

A Cal Poly architecture instructor has found a new use for some otherwise unused beer cans.

Marcel Sedletzky is using them to insulate a house of his own design, which was started in 1983, in the fishing community of Bahia Kino in Sonora, Mexico.

"This building (idea) I conceived...to sort of test my own theories in originality and how it applies to architecture," he said.

His goal was to avoid prefabricated materials and instead utilize local resources such as sand, gravel and rock in a different and possibly more efficient manner to create a structure of his own.

But Sedletzky also discovered another building material which was readily available in the local area.

"There is a resource, ... that is empty beer cans, that are strewn all over the beach," he said. "I cleaned the beach."

He paid some of the local children ages 6 to 10 to gather the cans which he said had been thrown on the beach primarily by the fishermen.

So, instead of being a community eyesore, the cans have been put to use as insulation in the walls and ceiling of Sedletzky's 400-square foot house.

The cans serve as sealed air pockets which keep the house cool in temperatures above 100 degrees, he said, even though the walls are only 6 inches thick.

His house contains the essentials such as living space, sleeping quarters and storage. However, it is not elaborate because Sedletzky wanted it to be compatible with the local culture.

His consideration of the severe climate led to the use of yet another local resource—white shells—which he mixed into cement to make the concrete for walkways.

The white shells are cool on the feet, he said, in addition to providing a good wearing surface and adding aesthetic value.

Sedletzky trained some of the community members in labor-related skills for this project and has encouraged them to use cans as insulation in their future buildings as well.

While continuing his work on his project during vacations, he hopes to have the building completed by the summer of 1990.

And although he already owns another house next door to this one, he has no plans to sell this original structure, which, he said, does attract some attention.

"A lot of people come from the village to watch what's going on," he explained.

Poly to clash with Sac State in crucial Saturday match

By Anthony M. Romero

The Cal Poly Mustang football team returns home after a recent upset of fifth-ranked San Jose State. This week, the Mustangs will face conference leader Sacramento State.

Lyle Setencich is wary about the game.

"Sac Poly is currently 2-2 overall and 1-1 in conference, while Sacramento State brings a 3-1 overall record and a wireless 0-1 conference slate to Mustang Stadium at 7 p.m. Saturday," Setencich said.

"Sacramento State has a very talented offense. They have an All-American tailback (Donald Hair)," Setencich said, "and two wide receivers who are capable of breaking the long one at any time.

"Sac State is in a class by itself," Setencich said. "We're not only celebrating the theme, but we're also celebrating the fact that this is our first game this year."
I discovered the 'F' word
By Nicole Jones

Since the time of that horrifying class, I have come to realize that the was not an isolated experience — nor at school or at work.

As we women will always have to deal with condescension. Although things have changed a great deal in the long time of every woman before absolute equality is achieved. In the meantime many women have been, and will continue to be, accused of being too "sensitive" or trying to be "masculine." Those accusations come from men, and sometimes from women who do not accept changing stereotypes. Men will always be men, and women — who will become women (if either) should depend on the individual.

We, as feminists, do not have to stand up and scream "feminism," we don't have to try to change the world. We, as women, do not have to emulate "manhood" — we are women, soon to be career women. And, if beyond gender a division must be made, we must say, women have two roles, a "feminine" and a "masculine." We are continually challenged. More is expected of a woman and must be prepared to give. Resistance is not always black and white, it is a gray area. Two years have passed since that class, and I have often thought of that professor, but he seems to me like a man who has taken his "office stories" and "good ol' days" memories to London — hoohar for Cal Poly!

Coping with tragedy

Student and alumnus talk about dealing with death

he attempted to keep her feelings under control as she talked, but the pain was clearly visible in her eyes.

Nancy Currell never expected to experience so much death during her college years.

One of Currell's friend was killed by a drunk driver while delivering pizza and the man who hit him, another friend's father, was killed at the same time. A young man she knew in the dorms committed suicide. And then, this summer just before finals, her friend Jimmy was carried over the falls near her home by a flash flood.

"Jimmy just didn't have time to get out of the water," Currell said. "When I talk about him like this, I detach myself. I'm not even picturing his face."

"When something like this happens, you begin realizing that death is all around you," she said.

"If you don't talk, it just festers inside of you," she said.

"Talking is healing." Handshy said.

But sometimes, when she sees a movie or hears a song that reminds her of Jimmy, she cannot help crying.

"You realize that this isn't the place, and I have to get out and talk to someone," Currell said.

Currell has received some individual counseling but says that she would like to be involved in a bereavement group.

"You need a basis of people who know how you feel," she said. "A group validates your feelings by listening and saying, 'It's okay that you feel that way.'" - Nancy Currell

Full Circle meetings this quarter will begin on Oct. 12 at 4 p.m. in the University Union Multi Cultural Center office.

Handshy stressed that the key to overcoming grief is talking about the death.

"If someone doesn't reach out for help," she said, "they continue to suffer and a loss becomes a lifelong tragedy."

"It seemed like a good solution to both issues," Levens said. If the credit union decides not to start a branch on campus, Levens said they will look into allowing a bank to open a branch on campus.

"We really need to provide a cashier service by January of 1990... because we need to provide a service for the clubs."

Lady Mustangs lose fifth straight match

By Suiy Wallace

The Lady Mustangs lost its fifth straight conference match in front of a sparse crowd Wednesday night against UC Santa Barbara in five games by scores of 10-15, 1-15, 15-12, 15-13, 11-15. The home game, seen by approximately 200, began with the Mustangs jumping out to a 9-3 lead, but suddenly the Mustangs seemed to lose momentum and the Gauchos began to close, taking the game with 12 successive points.

In what Head Coach Mike Wilton termed "an almost bizarre" turn of events, Santa Barbara continued its sweep with a total of 27 uninterrupted points to secure their second game at 1-15. Mustang Karen Anderson made the solo block that kept the team from complete defeat.

"It was brutal," said Wilton, "but we took a five minute promo break and we came back and decided to play ball."

Game three brought the turning point of the night and a tough fight for the players as each team struggled to gain and maintain an edge. The game was matched point for point, with the score tied at 12-12. Poly surged ahead with three rapid scores, bringing the crowd to their feet as the Mustangs won the first game of the match and began the fight to catch Santa Barbara.

After their first win of the evening Poly began the fourth game with a 3-point edge when Santa Barbara came back to even the battle at 4-4. Mustang Erin Deiters began to make her mark with successive plays that kept the ball going for Poly. The score was 12-11 when Gaucho Susan Bakker landed on her left ankle and went down with a sprain. Poly once again brought the crowd to their feet as they scored the last two points that secured the 15-13 win.

As the two teams squared off for the decisive game, the battle began in earnest. The turning point for the Mustangs was at 10-8 when Santa Barbara called a timeout and came back to jump to a 10-14 lead. Poly struggled to retrieve the lead with a Deiters block that gave Poly their last point of the night. Santa Barbara closed the match with an 11-15 win.

Wilton said, "We lost our ability to do quality swings in the final stretch, that's what made the difference. There was no ball control after 9-3 in the first game through the second game. The ball control was fair for three and four and most of five, but then we stopped attacking with quality swings on the ball."

Wilton had said earlier that "the NCAA won't look favorably on any team with a losing conference record" and with a Big West Conference record of 0-5 and 11-5 overall for Cal Poly, the latest defeat was a time to reassess.

"We're going to set the goal to get 13-5 in conference," said Wilton, "as long as we fight like we did tonight, good playing will come. Every coming match is tough. I don't mind if we're outscored as long as we fight."
