S. Senate endorses vote for Prop. 78
Brenda Suppa
Staff Writer

The Student Senate proposed a resolution Wednesday recommending that Cal Poly students, faculty and staff vote “yes” on Proposition 78, which affects funding for five new buildings on campus. The Recreation Sports/PE Events Center.

ASI President Tom Lebend said the level of awareness of the students that this proposition is essential to their recreation center.

The Higher Education Facilities Bond Act (Prop. 78) “provides for a bond issue of $500 million to provide funds for the construction or improvement of facilities of California’s public higher education institutions,” according to the San Luis Obispo sample ballot.

Because the recreation facility is jointly funded by the school and the state, if the bond does not pass, it will significantly affect the state’s portion of the funding.

Senate Resolution 88-02 states, “If Proposition 78 fails, no funding will be available for these projects for several years.”

Roger Conway, ASI executive director, explained that state funding is the difficult portion to obtain.

“We realized that the tricky part was state funding,” he said, but added that the “history of the voters is that a proposition like this has never been defeated.”

Approximately $288,000 has already been committed for the preliminary drawing phase of the recreation facility. “We have already spent quite a bit of money on this recreation facility,” Lebend said. “That’s why it (Prop. 78) fail, that money is down the tubes.”

The proposition also affects the following proposed buildings: remodeling addition to the Business Administration and Education, Faculty Offices I, Dairy Sciences I, Instructional Unit, and Student Services.

Students donate time to ASI Beyond Shelter
By Christine C. Temple
Staff Writer

After all the flying-debate and community outcry about the homeless in San Luis Obispo, Cal Poly’s Student Community Services is offering its support to local shelter with a new ASI sponsored program called Beyond Shelter.

As one of the largest pools of human resources in the community, Cal Poly students can volunteer their skills and time to help those less fortunate than themselves.

ASI President Tom Lebend said it is exciting that students are coordinating with the efforts of public service organizations in this projects.

“The neat thing is that when the students give their time, the results are immediate.” He said. It’s important to see the results right away when the students live here temporarily.

The director of Beyond Shelter, Beth Nester, said that 20 students have already offered their help since the program began in fall. Nester evaluates all volunteer and channels their individual gifts to the appropriate contact.

She said that no matter what the student’s skill or gift is, it can help someone needy in the community.

Five students are working in the local shelters in the county; others are baking, typing and spending time with children who are between homes.

Nester said she is interested in working with students of all ages that are level-headed, confident and responsible.

Hysen fights ‘pro-growth’ label
By Jeff Blizard
Staff Writer

Supervisor Carl Hysen, bidding for re-election against challenger David Blakely for the county’s 5th district, is fighting a pro-growth label pinned on him during the campaign.

Hysen said last Friday.

Hysen, first elected to the Board of Supervisors in 1981, acknowledged although he dislikes labels, he would rather be called a controlled-growth candidate rather than a pro-growth candidate.

Growth in San Luis Obispo County reflects a statewide surge in new housing and new residents, Hysen said, and it is impossible to stop people from coming into the county.

County growth cannot be stopped but it can be controlled, Hysen said.

“We can’t put our heads in the sand and say we can’t have growth,” Hysen said.

In addition, Hysen said the county is experiencing urban sprawl because there are not enough affordable houses in San Luis Obispo, where most of the jobs are, so residents are moving into unincorporated areas of the county, such as Los Osos.

Sixty percent of county residents live in the incorporated parts of the county while 40 percent live in the unincorporated areas.

Either more affordable housing needs to be built in San Luis Obispo to accommodate those residents, Hysen said, or new jobs have to be created in Los Osos, Morro Bay, the South County and other county areas where San Luis Obispo residents are moving.

Hysen said before new housing or new roads can be built to accommodate people living in unincorporated areas and commute to San Luis Obispo, the county must act quickly to increase its water supply.

“Water is by far the biggest issue in the campaign,” Hysen said.

Hysen wants the county to move forward with plans to hook up with the State Water Project, which would bring an aqueduct from the Sacramento River to the county.

The county has paid $6 million over the past 25 years to hook up with the State Water Project and is already entitled to 25,000 acre-feet of water from the project, Hysen said. He favors using the County Water Plan including the Jack Creek, Santa Rita Creek and Lake Nacimiento projects.

Hysen said Blakely wants more time to decide whether to support the State Water Project.

“The biggest difference is my opponent wants to study it, I want to act on it,” Hysen said.

Unless there is about 35 inches of rain absorbed into the ground and run-off this spring, the county will be facing water rationing, Hysen said.

Enrollment explosion spurs UC expansion plan
By J.W. McPhail
Staff Writer

Three more University of California campuses should be built by the year 2005 to absorb a projected enrollment explosion, the UC president told the board of Regents.

No likely locations for the university have been revealed.

According to the Los Angeles Times, President David G. Padden said in 12 years, the university expects enrollment to expand by 63,000 students.

The nine campuses already in the UC system will be able to add about 43,000 students, leaving 20,000 outside the system.

Fears that too large an institution will result in long commutes will be alleviated by the additional campuses, according to the Fresno Bee.

“Fears that too large an institution would result in long commutes is not a matter of accommodating growth...it’s a matter of taking care of those already here,” said Carl Dooley, chairman of the Tulare County UC task force, according to the Bee.

Santa Maria is also interested and has formed a task force.

The cost of the proposed plans is expected to be about $3 million each. The proposal must be approved by the regents and the state legislature and much debate is expected.

The California State University system, of which Cal Poly is a part, is also expanding, said Steve McCarthy of the CSU Chancellor’s Office.

The university is now operating two off-campus centers, one in Ventura, which is an extension of CSU Northridge, and one in San Marcos, which is a satellite of San Diego State University.

An enrollment increase in the CSU system and population in those communities grows, the off-campus centers will become independent campuses, said McCarthy.

A CSU board meeting Nov. 15, he said, will address the issue of independence for the San Marcos center.

A third campus has been proposed for Contra Costa County, he said.

University enrollment is expected to climb because of immigration to the state, the relatively low cost of a UC or CSU education compared to private schools and because the children of baby boomers born after World War II will have reached college age.

Potts tell the story. After people were informed as to who was supporting which initiative, voters' opinions changed dramatically. The court system support has switched to Prop. 103, presumably because this is supported by "consumer advocate" Ralph Nader. Letters to the editor indicate that the insurance industry (Prop. 104 (and to a lesser extent 101 and 106) have suffered the most from this voter backlash. Some of the latest polls clearly show that the No-Fault initiative has a long way to go. Unfortunately, Prop. 104 is the only initiative that reasonably approaches the insurance mess that is California. This column, the last of three parts, examines the two insurance-sponsored initiatives, Props. 101 and 104.

Prop. 101, known as the Polanco initiative, is sponsored by Los Angeles, the initiative calls for, among other things, a 50 percent cut in bodily injury liability rates, to seem to make it attractive to both consumers and insurers. However, no major consumer group currently supports the initiative nor does any appear to be interested in it. Firstly, the initiative only freezes rates for one year, and is only in effect for four years. The initiative also limits the amount of judgment a plaintiff can recover in a court action (limits on non-economic loss recovery) and forces the insured to sue a third party before recovering their normal auto insurance benefits. Finally, the initiative makes no permanent or fundamental change in the auto insurance system. After the initiative expires in four years, rate inflation would probably return in its present form.

Prop. 104, the No-Fault initiative, is sponsored by the insurance industry. Prop. 104 will significantly and fundamentally change the insurance industry. The initiative is the only initiative designed to address one of the sources of expense for the insurers: the proliferation of lawsuits which have bogged down the court system (for example, it is nearly impossible to get a decision in a personal injury case). Prop. 104 forbids insurance companies from making a fraudulent claim, reduce insurance fraud.

As for the editorial's comment that plus/minus grading will be appreciated by professors: If the Mustang Daily or its sources are arguing that professors will not be careful in their grading, or will somehow be random or hap­ hazard in evaluating students, I can only urge these advocates to walk cautiously when pursuing this charge.

Investigation links harassment reports from Cal Poly and county

By Bruce Sutherland
Staff Writer

Reports of harassment and sexual battery upon female joggers on campus have been linked to other incidents around the South County, a Public Safety investigator said.

Campus and local police have been investigating a 28-year-old male who has reportedly been making lewd comments to women during their early morning runs. The suspect, whose identity Public Safety Investigator Ray Berrett refused to disclose, is described as 6 feet 1 inch tall, 200-plus pounds, dark wavy hair and blue eyes.

Berrett got a search warrant and checked the suspect’s home for any evidence that might be used as leads or clues that might be used as leads or clues.

From the high school reports, Berrett said there are incidents of indecent exposure that may be added to the charges.

There have also been reports from Arroyo Grande and Nipomo, which Berrett believes are connected to the San Luis reports.

Berrett has gotten a positive identification from the Cal Poly victims through a line-up of photographs.

Positive identifications have also been made by women in Arroyo Grande, Nipomo and San Luis Obispo, he said.

The case has been turned over to the District Attorney’s office.

Berrett said police officials have spoken with the suspect and indicated it would not be a good idea for him to come back onto campus. The last reported incident was Sept. 28.

Although some people may only consider these types of problems to be a nuisance, Public Safety requests that all incidents be reported.

Chest pains cause concern

Health prompts return of Costa Rica director

By Alison Skratt
Managing Editor

The director of Cal Poly’s College of Agriculture, Larry Rathbun, said he will be back for a short recovery time.

Rathbun is on a medical leave of absence after complaining of chest pains.

The possibility of a heart attack was found, he will be returning for further tests and a checkup, said Lark Carter, dean of the School of Agriculture.

Rathbun’s wife convinced him to have a medical checkup after they moved into a new residence Oct. 24 and he complained of chest pains.

Although Rathbun was in pain, Carter said, he is feeling much better.

“arke had no evidence of a heart attack,” Carter said, “but the warning signals were there.”

Because Rathbun is only expected to be back for a short recovery time, Cal Poly will not be sending a replacement or substitute to oversee the project in Costa Rica.

Joe Sabel, assistant dean for the School of Agriculture, will substitute for Rathbun and represent Cal Poly at a board of director’s meeting for the project next week.

To vote against Proposition 78 would be to vote against other things, Lebens said.

“It’s really not a recreation facility issue,” Lebens explained if the proposition fails, the Student Senate would have to redirect the money that has already been collected through student fees for the recreation facility. ASI would submit a referendum that would then go up for student approval.

“What would happen to all that money built up in reserve is a question that’s in all of our minds,” he said. If the proposition fails, they would not build half of a facility, said Lebens, because the students voted for a whole recreation facility. However, he added, “I think the odds of 78 passing are pretty good.”

Even if Prop. 78 passes, Lebens said, there are still some financial hurdles to overcome concerning the governor’s budget, which will be submitted to the legislature Jan. 10, 1989.

“There exists a possibility that even with the passing of 78 that we will run into financial problems,” Levens said.

Cal Poly’s recreation facility is ranked 32 on the Trustees’ priority list out of approximately 60 projects included in the state’s budget. Two factors could move the project up on the list before the governor’s budget comes out, including the joint-funding of the recreation facility and the fact that student funds have already been invested.

“That will all work in its (the rec facility’s) favor,” Levens said, whether the money is provided through the governor’s budget or an appeal to the state legislature.

A cash flow problem in matching state funds has caused a six-month delay on the recreation facility, Conway said. The state may not have collected enough money this year, he explained.

Currently the architect has the preliminary drawings for the facility and is estimating the cost of production. Because of problems at other state universities, Conway said, “the architect is being extremely cautious about the costing phase.”

"But we're willing to accept anyone who thinks they have something to offer," she said.

There are seven or eight shelters that provide services for different needy populations in the community. There are women's shelters, children's shelters, juvenile shelters, and alcohol abuse facilities.

One of the most visible populations of the homeless consists of those discharged from mental institutions. Nester said with these kinds of people, volunteers have to be ready for anything.

"You have to be able to think on your feet and maintain a level head," she said.

Nester has devised a feedback system to insure the safety and satisfaction of each volunteer with their respective assignments.

After one month on the job, she will call to see if students are happy with what they are doing. If students aren't happy, Nester will change assignments if necessary.

So far, Nester said, students seem to be satisfied and positive with their work.

Women run to tenth title

For the tenth consecutive year the winner of the CCAA Women's Cross Country championship has hailed from San Luis Obispo. The Lady Mustangs once again demonstrated their dominance in the CCAA by winning at Pomona. The Mustangs have not lost a CCAA championship meet since Lance Hart took over the helm in 1979.

The team designed the course as being ideal for hiking, horses, pack mules or mountain goats. The first two miles contained very steep up and down hills. "It wasn't until the third mile that the course took on a relatively normal running path," he said.

The Mustangs were allowed to control the race by the competition. "Our plan was to run a related race for the first mile and then we let the racing begin," Pauline Stehly took command of the race from teammate Patti Almendarez and went on to win the race. Melanie Hiatt was a close second and Almendarez finished fourth.

Noreen Debettencourt and Sherri Minard finished sixth and seventh respectively. Rounding out the Cal Poly attack was Amanda Marks, 11th and Tracy Lechler, 17th.

Receiving All-CCAA honors were Stehly, Hiatt, Almendarez, Debettencourt and Minard.

Next week the Mustangs will be hosting the West Regionals which Coach Hart hopes will be the final step before a return to the nationals.

Cal Poly men regain crown

The Cal Poly Men's Cross Country team regained the CCAA Championship with a win on a very demanding course Saturday at Pomona.

Coach Tom Henderson who was named the CCAA Men's Cross Country Coach of the Year, said the course was the most demanding the Mustangs had seen in several years. "The course was designed to take a toll on the 'speed racers' and favored the home team (Pomona) because of its familiarity. Despite the unfamiliar course the Mustangs made their move after the fourth mile mark in the five mile race. Trailing Cal State LA, Tim Campbell, Chris Craig, Mike Priott and Jim Aguirre began and "incredible push to the finish line" Henderson said. Sorenson came from the back of the pack to finish ahead of teammates Campbell and Craig, sewing up the Mustangs victory with the seventh, eighth, ninth and eleventh places. "That was the most incredible finish we've seen all season." Finishing first for the Mustangs and third overall was Steve Neubeam. "Steve ran a outstanding race. He is proving that he is one of the top men in the Nation," Henderson said.

Booters take Toros by the horns

By Anthony M. Romero

Staff Writer

Cal Poly men's soccer team unanimously bailed out a barrage of goal attempts on Cal State Dominguez Hills Saturday night, just couldn't break the Toros stubborn defense and settled for a 1-1 tie. The tie all but eliminates the Mustangs' chances of receiving an at-large berth in the NCAA II play-offs.

Dan Campbell led the assault on the Toros in the second half. Trailing 1-0, the Mustangs made their move. Tim Hire tried to maneuver the ball wide of the goal. After two 10 minute overtime periods the game ended 1-1, with O'Brien made valiant attempts to score, through the netted goal on a pass from Campbell, but the attempt was marred by a Dominguez man who fouled him. This resulted in a free kick and Campbell wasted no time in putting the Mustangs on the scoreboard and we're a little too physical a contest, but were a little too demanding course Saturday at Pomona. The Mustangs had seen in several years. "The term, a rebuilding year, is a ludicrous proverb invented by coaches," Gartner said. "We've never had a losing record in 10 years and we don't have any scholarships either. We'll be back." The Mustangs have a 7-8-2 record with two games remaining, and will try to make it 11 years without a losing record. They finish the season against Bakersfield and Pomona.

With two games of a three game homestand behind them the Lady Mustangs split the first two matches and face fifth ranked Brigham Young in a rubber match tonight.

Cal Poly avenged a loss earlier this season to the San Jose State Spartans Saturday in four games. After losing a tough first game 19-17 the Mustangs reeled off the next three games 16-14, 15-8, 15-7 to put the Spartans away. Michelle Hansen had 20 kills on the night followed by Kerry House with 15, Amy Svihart 10 and Jill Myers and Karen Anderson with 9.

The Lady Mustangs once again proved that the officiating was a problem as the Mustangs were penalized 15 times for 110 yards while Davis was flagged only seven times for 62 yards. Injuries may have hampered the Poly attack as quarterbacks Tom Sullivan, Keith Jarrett were injured during the game leaving third string player David Lafferty at the controls.

Sullivan was 7-11 for 140 yards, Jarrett was 5-12 for 170 yards. On the other side of the ball, Tom Carey had ten tackles on the night, followed by Chris Dunn with seven and Rene Oliver, John Fassett and Steve Habermehl with six apiece.

The Mustangs will continue to do the same things that have gotten them this far this season, Setencich said. "I think the work ethic is very important," he said.

Cal Poly returns home next week to play South Utah State.

Poly hopes bleak after tie

The Mustang football team traveled to UC Davis in hopes of upsetting the 17th ranked Aggies and coming out with a clearer picture of their playoff chances. But unlike the writing on the Mustangs locker room wall, a 21-21 tie left the playoff picture somewhat murky.

Last week, head coach Setencich painted "UC Davis" on the Mustang locker room trying to remind Poly of who they were playing.

With eight seconds left in the game, the Mustangs opted for a tying field goal at the Aggie nine yard line. Coach Setencich said he decided to go for the kick because the team had played too hard to lose.

"I don't think they (playoff chances) are any better now than they were before the game," he said.

The Mustangs more than doubled the offensive yardage of Davis, 484-229. Setencich said that the officiating was a problem as the Mustangs were penalized 15 times for 110 yards while Davis was flagged only seven times for 62 yards.

Car strikes man on moped
By Yumi Sera
Staff Writer
A San Luis Obispo resident riding a motor scooter was hit by a car at about 5:20 p.m. Friday near Santa Barbara and Church Streets.

Keith Moore, 22, pulled out of a private driveway into the pathway of an oncoming vehicle.

Gregory Nelson, driving the Volkswagen Rabbit, said it "happened really fast."

"He wasn't wearing a helmet... his scooter was pretty much destroyed," said the agricultural management sophomore.

"It's scary that my car could do something like that, because people tend to think that scooters are real sturdy, and they're not," said Nelson.

When the two vehicles collided, Moore was sent to the pavement. He suffered abrasions to both legs, his right hand and the back of his head.

Moore was sent to Sierra Vista Hospital suffering minor injuries.

Governor's Prop. 102 OK
spurs outcry
SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - The state's leading pollster says Gov. George Deukmejian may have done as much harm as good by declaring his support for a controversial ballot initiative on AIDS-virus testing.
"I don't think the impact is going to be overly one-sided," said Mervin Field, publisher of the Field Poll on various political issues. "I think I would foresee the 'no' side getting more attention now than they would have otherwise."
Field added that voters who have not focused on the debate over Proposition 102 are now more likely to learn about the predicted huge costs of the measure, considered one of its most vulnerable points.
Political observers also note that Deukmejian's support for propositions in the past has not always helped them.
The Republican governor on Friday announced his support of the measure, which would require reporting of those infected with the AIDS virus as well as those "reasonably believed" to be carrying it. It also would allow AIDS virus tests to be required of job applicants and anyone applying for insurance.
The governor ignored the advice of his own top health adviser, Dr.
Kenneth Kizer, and even the California Medical Association, which called the proposition "bad medicine."
Opponents say experience with similar measures in other states shows that Proposition 102 will cause fewer people to be tested for the Human Immunodeficiency Virus because of fear their names will be reported to employers, landlords and others.
But anti-tax crusader Paul Gunn,
the initiative's co-sponsor who tested positive for AIDS antibodies after open heart surgery, praised the governor for making an "informed decision."
Gunn this weekend called the measure "our best hope to, at long last, begin the process of identifying, tracing and treating this killer disease."
Just hours after Deukmejian announced his support, nearly 3,000 protesters took to San Fransisco streets.
"How can he (the governor)
know more than all the state health officials who are opposed to 102" asked protester Richard Brown.
