Headache? A visit with the dentist might help

By Caroline Boullon

If students complain of inexplicable headaches above the eyes, their best bet may be to consult a dentist because they could be suffering from Temperomandibular Joint Disorder, more commonly called TMJ Disorder.

"It's really important to get an accurate diagnosis," said Pam Dassenko, D.D.S. "Although there are several types of TMJ disorder, she added, the most common types of pain are caused by muscle spasms resulting from loose disks. And when a disk is out of place, the jaw muscles don't function as they should," Dassenko said. Headaches are a common complaint because of irritation of the temporals muscle, which is attached to one of the jaw joints; thus, if people grind their teeth, for example, these joints are irritated, and a headache results, Dassenko said. Other symptoms of TMJ include neckaches, backaches, a "clicking" sound when the jaw is moved, facial aches and inability to open the mouth wide, Dassenko said.

Temperomandibular Joint Disorder research is fairly new and the condition was discovered only about two years ago, Dassenko said. But, she said, there are already TMJ specialists. "I think in the past we often treated patients like hypochon- drics," she added.

Dassenko said the newest research revealed women's connective tissue to the jaw disks to be different than men's, making women more susceptible to TMJ. TMJ disorder can be hereditary, Dassenko said, and a trauma to the teeth can disrupt the joints and cause the disorder. Stress may seem to be a likely cause, but actually "stress may cause more symptoms (like grining teeth)," but I doubt it adds to the problem," Dassenko said. Although there is no proven cure for TMJ, there are a variety of things which offer relief and the dentist is degenerating further, Dassenko said.

Physical therapy is Dassenko's first recommendation to someone diagnosed with TMJ. This involves the use of moist heat to relax muscles and change posture to support the joint dis- tance.

Dassenko said a temporary relief to facial pain or headache is to apply heat directly to the affected area, which relaxes the muscles.

Fall quarter offered 13 Cal Poly students the unique oppor- tunity to study and analyze the architecture of a 13th century Gothic city in Italy. Cal Poly received the invitation to study in Siena, a walled city in central Italy, as a result of an architec- ture professor Sandra Davis Lakeman's interest in the Piazzas (squares) of Italy. Lakeman has been involved in a long range research project studying how people use urban space and how it is lighted. She created a photographic pres- entation of different principles of light found in the urban environ- ment of Siena, and used these in her design classes at Cal Poly to teach students about the light, architecture and culture of Siena. The desire to maintain exteriors of ancient buildings presents a special challenge to students, said Lakeman. Students design- ed models for buildings in Siena such as an annex to the town hall, a new library and a cultural museum.

They were also presented with the challenge of finding ways to modify existing buildings that are no longer in use. "There is a hospital that takes up about 5 percent of the city and it's almost empty," Lakeman said. There are several other buildings that have fallen into disuse and "we're trying to fit these into the urban tissue," she said.

The program consists of three quarters of studying about Siena. One quarter was spent in Siena analyzing the needs of the city, while the next two-quarters will be spent at Cal Poly developing solutions and designs for the city. A participant in the program, Chandra Bowden, considered the time spent in Siena very valuable. "I have seen streets of three places, but you can't understand the scale until you go there," she said. The problems of an old city are very different from a new one," she said being in Siena and "just experiencing the culture and seeing the architecture" gave her a new perspective.

Another student in the program, Dan Manlongat, agreed that understanding the culture of Siena was important. "We had to learn about Italian culture in order to design," said Manlongat. "The difference is what makes the project more exciting and more of a challenge." A presentation, "An Exhibition of Cal Poly Faculty Research and Student Work," will include the final models and sketches of designs created by students and Lakeman's slide presentation. It is scheduled for exhibition in September 1990 in Siena, and will also be presented in Buffalo, New York in March 1991 and at Cal Poly in June 1991.

Lakeman said she hopes the See PROGRAM, page 3
New law is unfair

A new law going into effect this month has the right idea but is employing the wrong punishment.

The law states that any person who receives a drug or alcohol violation will have their driver’s license suspended for one year. It does not matter whether or not the person was driving, about to drive, or totally without access to a car. The officer presents that he has nothing to do with driving, yet the punishment will effectively create a person’s transportation ability.

Many people are in agreement that driving is an abhorrent activity. Numerous people are killed every year by drunken drivers. But SADDA has wrung out the public’s emotions so that it is now the drunk drivers who are punished. The penalty for a DUI has increased dramatically in the last few years. The fee is now over $1,000 and if you do not wish to pay the fee, you must pay twice the amount when you are at the courtroom level at your next hearing.

This new law will not have much effect in places like Los Angeles or San Francisco. The police in large cities have too much to do without chasing around minors and legally-aged adults who have open containers outside of parties, where they may have made responsible arrangements to be picked up or to spend the night.

But in a place like SLO, where it seems like there is a cop for every college student, the effect will likely be enormous. The number of DUIDs is very high in SLO, and likely the number of alcohol- and drug-related violations is also basic. Cal Poly students are going to be hit hard by this new law, if it is enforced seriously, which it probably will be.

The crackdown on underage drinking and drunken driving is understandable. Those two actions are illegal. But to take away the driver’s license of an adult who did not commit a driving-related offense is wrong.

To those who trashed the field

Editor — We, the Cal Poly Rugby Club, would like to endorse the moderate group of individuals — a group which has a lack of respect for Cal Poly and the playing fields vital to the university — a group which diligently maintains the campus and the playing fields vital to the student body of Cal Poly, to use our facilities wisely.

Editor — I believe I have a solution to CAPTURE woes.

Editor — In response to Coleen Bondy’s Jan. 9 column “Think about your future,” I wish to encourage Ms. Bondy to do some thinking.

I believe the main premise of the column was to get students to think about and respond to the problems the world faces today.

What I have trouble understanding is how Cal Poly’s liberal arts school is either the problem, or the solution. I disagree with her that Cal Poly is a “weak liberal arts school.” I am a senior political science major, and while this is a small school, I have done more than enough to prove that any student who wishes to be well-rounded and well-informed should be able to add the liberal arts curriculum.

A Star Trek confrontation

By Yumi Sera

Star Trek is a joke. When I hear the words "... these are the voyages of the Starship Enterprise ..." or "... to boldly go where no man has gone before," I just want to puke.

Give me a break, I mean, I’m all for enjoying a television show, and I even have my favorites too, but when it comes to Star Trek, whether it is the original, New Generation, one of the four movies or the countless books, enough is enough.

I’m not really the concept or the show itself I dislike. It’s the addiction of millions of people to a piece of fiction that makes me sick to a point of fear.

"Trekkies" have formed clubs and hold conventions to worship what has become a major part of their lives. For example, Starbase Houston is a club with 100 members who maintain a flag, jacket and anthem. I agree with Ms. Bondy’s statement in her column:

"... as a swarm of lobotomized houseflies." Some of these people are insane.

I have done enough to prove that any student who wishes to be well-rounded and well-informed should be able to add the liberal arts curriculum.

An answer to CAPTURE woes

Editor — I believe I have a solution to CAPTURE woes.

The problems are underway, there is a massive tie-up of the phone lines, caused by people trying to add classes that are "full" in the hopes that someone who wishes to drop may already have done so.

But why should people who have enough time classes spend minutes or hours trying to get through when they can simply wait until the phones aren’t as busy during the second week or so?

I believe there should be another system, that would work with extension 7777 during peak times, but would accept only drop requests.

This way, people who wish to drop would do so more promptly (since no one enjoys wasting time on the telephone). And people who do get through on 7777 would be able to add the liberal courses.

Mars Mondor
Editor

One of my all-time favorite things to do is watch Star Trek. I don’t care if it’s the original series, the Next Generation or one of the four movies. The whole premise of the show is that any hope will be mankind’s future.

The original series from today’s standards, critics say the effects and props were hokey. Often, they say, the story lacked believability. But those people miss the point. Sure, this was a science fiction show and a bit of credibility had to be sacrificed into space, but there was and still is more to it.

Star Trek, both new and old, offers moral dilemmas and some thought-provoking solutions to an issue.

The adventures storylines attempt to show that difficult problems do not have black and white solutions. It’s not really the concept or the show itself I dislike. It’s the addiction of millions of people to a piece of fiction that makes me sick to a point of fear.
Money woes cause clinic to close

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Financial problems will force the University of California's Langley Porter Psychiatric Institute to close its 22-bed unit for suicidal or mentally ill teen-agers at the end of the month, according to university officials.

The closure will last at least three months and will leave the city with only one hospital with beds for young psychiatric patients. Staff learned of the plan Friday.

But the decision is being questioned by community health advocates because the university has not received any federal funding for the ship's exhibition, and enlargement costs of the exhibition. Lakeman's photographs are being compiled in a book, "Natural Light and the Italian Piazza," which will be published in Italy in both Italian and English.

She said the main point of this program is to develop international relationships.

"I'm just planting seeds and seeing what happens," she said.

The library has set up extra computers at its computer lab entrance to inspect students' programs for viruses before they are used on other computers, said Bizzell Memorial Library manager Donald Hudson.

A computer virus is a program that, once inside a computer, duplicates itself. A virus can tell computers to put a message on a screen or shut down at a certain time or just replicate itself until the computer overloads.

The library's virus probably got into a student's disk, but the student may not have known the virus was there, Hudson said. The library's computers are not linked to any computer off-campus.

of student affairs, said Tuesday Gus Heldt and Ben Dugan, who admitted defacing the poster, had violated the terms of the Stanford residence agreement.

The two were banned from student housing for two quarters.

Heldt, of Vancouver, British Columbia, and Dugan, of Glen Ellyn, Ill., still face possible disciplinary charges from Stanford's judicial system.

In a letter, Robinson told the pair: "Your behavior in producing and posting in Ujamaa House an insulting caricature of a black man violated your understanding to be considerate of other residents and to respect their rights at all times. It is inconsistent with both the letter and the spirit of the housing agreement that you signed."

The two white freshmen have not lived in a student residential community since they publicly admitted they defaced the flyer Oct. 1 after a hallway discussion about the racial origins of the composer.

Robinson's decision is limited to the students' housing privileges. Judicial Officer Sally Cole is currently considering whether defacing the poster violated rules of student conduct and whether the university's disciplinary process should be further invoked against them.

He noted that they have been excluded from the student residential community since their first month at Stanford, that they have experienced censure from fellow students and others and that they have had to "forgo many of the resources, privileges and sources of support that other students enjoy."

Lottery and art?
Poly gallery gets grant to fund Chafetz show of satirical wit

Two campus art exhibits made possible by California lottery funds debuted early this quarter. The Distinguished Visiting Artists/Scholars category of the California State Lottery Education Fund provided $3,400 for Sidney Chafetz's "Saire and Homage," on exhibit in the University Art Gallery. And "Art and Technology," on display in the University Union Galerie, received a $3,000 lottery grant.

"The grant paid for basically the whole show," said Jeanne Ruggles, art and design professor who submitted the proposal for the University Art Gallery. Jeanne LaBarbera, UU Galerie director, said the $3,000 was "very helpful."

"We work so hard to get funding, that this grant is really appreciated," she said. "It's a chance to show our pride and willingness to work harder."

Sidney Chafetz's "Saire and Homage" opened Monday in the University Art Gallery with a slide lecture and reception following Monday.

Woodcuts and etchings are Chafetz's first loves, featured prominently in his retrospective exhibit. "He has some works from 40 years ago," said Henry Westels, art and design professor. "Chafetz has the hand and eye of a master draughtsman, as well as a biting wit, with comments on professional academia."

And this artist certainly has the academic experience to draw from. An Ohio State University art professor from 1948 until his recent retirement, Chafetz's images include humorous, often sharply satirical comments on university life.

One woodwork is Chafetz's response to the opening of a McDonald's across from Ohio State. So many students chose it over dorm food that the school's food services suffered. It portrays a huge burger in the sky, with a scholarly-looking fellow in cap and gown flying in the clouds with it.

"Etching is labor intensive and very messy," Chafetz said as he flipped from one slide to another. "There have been little refinements since its invention."

"woodcutting is my true love. It's a very gratifying medium. I get a lot of sensual pleasure from cutting the wood."

Working with responsive light and plasma, Parker's "crystal balls" have animated lasers that resemble membranes, which can follow one's hand when the globe is touched. LaBarbera said "imitations pale by comparison."

Bradley's works are "mathematically and coloristically perfect," she said, and he actually performs complex calculations to achieve that perfection. Bradley contributed $1,000 to ship his fragile works, said I. aBarbera.

"That and the lottery grant made this show possible," she said.

Rocha and Johnson are the only artists able to attend today's reception. Kepes studied in Berlin and London before coming to the United States in 1937. Eight years later, he began teaching at MIT, where he introduced visual design courses into MIT's School of Architecture. Kepes established the MIT Center for Advanced Visual Studies in 1967.

"Art and Technology" will be on display in the Galerie until Feb. 19.
Family ties gain rocker airtime

By Stewart McKenzie
Special to the Daily

If there's one thing the 1970s and 1980s have given us, it's the emergence of The offspring of the Legends. Carrie Fisher, Michael Douglas, Kiefer Sutherland, Julian Lennon, the Sheen family and others walked up the walk of fame with some help from their bankable names.

Sure, you've heard of Aaron Neville (recently doing the theme from the Mickey Mouse show on "Stay Awake," an album of Disney movie/tcoon interpretations). Sure, you've heard of the Neville Brothers (remember "Tell It Like It Is!" from the '60s?)

Now put your hands together for son Ivan Neville and his band The Room, playing Saturday at the Baja Bar and Restaurant, care of Baja promoter Wally Barnick.

Ivan, fresh out with the September release of "If My Ancestors Could See Me Now," has seen the single "Not Just Another Girl" get a fair amount of airplay on top-40 stations. This is a commercial, not artistic, album all the way. More on this later.

In terms of Neville's biz, obviously he had much to observe from his dad Aaron and the New Orleans music scene. Ivan starting playing on an electric guitar at age 10 — a dime store guitar — but he only played bass lines on it and lost interest in it. At 15, with his mom's and jazz player James Booker's inspiration, he took up the piano.

Deciding to slick with music, he has played with local New Orleans bands, moving on later to playing keyboards with the Neville Brothers. Ivan also played bass on the Rolling Stones' "Dirty Work," keyboards on a Keith Richards solo project, and was a member of Bonnie Raitt's band (Bonnie sings backup on "Falling Out of Love").

With this experience, coupled with the Neville name, it seems Ivan is relatively assured a career in music. From a marketing viewpoint, this is good news. As an artist, however, Ivan Neville's new album is not an "unusually mature musical debut" as his press release says.

The album isn't musical wallpaper, but it's not too far away.

The big plus carrying the album is Ivan's voice. Ivan has a smooth, deep voice that gushes out smoother than an oil well. Unfortunately, the lyrics he's singing say nothing new. Typical of the songs on the album is "Primitive Man," of which the first lyric was pulled for the album title.

KCPR to broadcast
Die Fledermaus

About 114 years ago in Vienna, the premiere of Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus," an opetta in three acts, was a resounding failure. Fortunately, for three generations of opera lovers, its Berlin premiere a few months later was well-received and international popularity soon followed.

It continues to enchant audiences worldwide and will be the featured performance this week on Texaco-Metropolitan Opera, broadcast by KCPR.

According to the Oxford Concise Dictionary of Opera, the text for Die Fledermaus (The Bat) was derived from a French farce à vaudeville titled Le Revellon, which was based in turn on Roderich Bendix's German comedy of 1851, Das Gefangnis.

Women's film series debuts with Diana Ross

Films by and about women will be the subject of the winter quarter film series sponsored by Cal Poly Arts. Films representing the life of women throughout the world will be screened.

Lady Sings the Blues, featuring Diana Ross as singing great Billie "Lady Day" Holiday, will run Monday, Jan. 16 at 7:30 p.m. in the Cal Poly Theatre. All other shows in the series will be in Chamash Auditorium.

A double feature of Sisters of the Balance of Happiness and Olympia, Part II: The Festival of Beauty will run Jan. 30. The first is a 1981 subtitled German film about two sisters, one successful, the other suffering because she can never fit her sister's mold. Olympia, Part II is a 1938 Leni Riefenstahl documentary about the 1936 Berlin Olympics, conveying the strength and rhythm of the athletes in motion.

The series will conclude on March 20 with the British film, a 1984 U.S. release about a woman's right to sexual fantasies without punishment or degradation.

Tickets for the full series are $8 per student, $20 general; for the mini series (five films), $12 students, $14 general; and single payers are $3 and $4. Call 756-1427 for further information.

dent of Chafetz’s during her undergraduate and graduate years at Ohio State.

“It amazed me how flexible he was in responding to student’s work,” she said. “He let me set my own agenda, yet saw that I accomplished enough quality work.”

Included in “Satire and Homage” are political satires, like striking collages on Watergate and “Irangaie.”

“I want my kids to know their old man is concerned about political corruption,” said Chafetz.

“Satire and Homage” will be on display at the Gallery, on the first floor of the Dexter Building, through Feb. 5.

When asked why he has work that dates back 40 years, Chafetz responded humbly.

“I have most of my own work because most people don’t want it,” he said with a shy smile. Judging from the response of opening night guests, this artist needn’t worry about people not wanting his creations.

Stop fooling around. It's time to get hardcore about software.
With Microsoft.

We have proven to be the industry leader in the 80's, but that isn't enough — we will also become the dominant software of the 90's. In our bid for excellence, we've broken ground with our OS/2, Networking, Languages, and Application products. In order to maintain our high degree of quality, we're looking for the best. If you're serious about the development process, we want to talk to you.

Work as a team with our developers to release world-class, quality products. Identify strengths and weaknesses in our future software and be responsible for implementing the necessary changes to make it the best in the industry. We have opportunities in the following test engineering areas:

Systems
As an Engineer in our Systems test groups, you will be intimately involved in the systems development process. You will become an expert on the internals of our state-of-the-art OS/2, networks, and compilers. You will design and code sophisticated software that exercises/tests new systems, including (hidden) "under the cover" features that only low-level programmers see. If you have strong coding skills, want to debug problems right into the systems software, and be part of the design effort that determines how the system will be implemented, Systems is the place for you. Knowledge of C and Assembly language preferred.

Applications
As an Engineer in our Applications test groups, you will design, execute, and document test suites for our applications software. You will generate test scripts, testing products for robustness, noting limitations, and conducting real-world environment testing. If you have a 4-year degree in Computer Science or a related field, solid problem-solving skills, the ability to learn a new product quickly, and a knack for breaking software, Applications is the place for you. Previous experience with software testing a definite plus.

To apply, send your resume and cover letter to: MICROSOFT CORPORATION, Human Resources, Dept. BDTEST, 16011 NE 36th Way, Box 97017, Redmond, WA 98073-9717. No phone calls, please. We are an equal opportunity employer.

TMJ

"Orthodontics (braces) are also used to correct people's bites and make them more comfortable," Dassenko said. Splints or bite plates are another way to relieve TMJ, she said. But the ultimate correction for the disorder is surgery, she added.

People who think they may have a TMJ disorder should not chew gum, but they should wear a bite plate if they grind their teeth, or try biofeedback therapy, Dassenko said. She also recommended that TMJ sufferers sleep on their backs, since if they sleep on their sides, they put pressure on the jaw. She warned, however, that people should be diagnosed as having TMJ and be under supervision before trying any of these possible reliefs.
Activists say Soviets are holding prisoners in hospitals

MOSCOW (AP) — A group of activists said Monday that some Soviet prisoners have been freed, plus 20 to 30 remain in special psychiatric hospitals staffed by "sadists." To support their claim, the activists held a news conference in a single-room apartment and named three people they say are political prisoners held in psychiatric hospitals. Two days earlier, an activist said they were political prisoners released in the past six months.

President Mikhail S. Gorbachev said Tuesday that "there are no political prisoners convicted for their political or religious beliefs in places of confinement" in his country. The U.S. State Department has credited the Soviets with "discrediting" the treatment of political prisoners, saying they freed 20 to 30 those held under laws limiting political and religious beliefs. But a U.S. official said it still has questions about 30 prisoners who are considered criminal violators by the Soviets.

A delegation of American psychiatrists is expected to arrive in Moscow in late February to see prisoners being held in psychiatric hospitals. But last year, Soviet officials announced that a new law makes it illegal to commit a "personally healthy person" to a psychiatric hospital. They said certain psychiatric hospitals were being transferred from control of the police to the Ministry of Health. To verify activists claims of change, a delegation of American psychiatrists is expected to arrive in Moscow in late February to visit alleged political prisoners being held in psychiatric hospitals, according to U.S. Embassy officials.

But Valeri Senderov, who served several years in the Perm labor camp for anti-Soviet pagandists, said "hundreds of people are still sitting in custody for political reasons."

Podrabinski said they believe 30 to 40 prisoners remain in the psychiatric hospitals, but he knows the names of only a few.

The most recent to be imprisoned is Ildar Bakshe, a former Soviet Air Force colonel who was sentenced in 1987 to five years on charges of attempting to overthrust his aircraft. He is believed to be in a psychiatric hospital.
