New fraternities may have to get IFC consent

By Cass Caulfield

A bill was introduced to the ASI Board of Directors Wednesday that would grant more authority to the Inter-Fraternity Council in dealing with new fraternities that organize on campus.

Bill 89-04, written by ASI Executive Assistant Tery Alberstein, and past rush chairman for Inter-Fraternity Council, is aimed at dealing with the tremendous growth of the greek system at Cal Poly. The bill will require the IFC president to sign the bylaws of any greek group after that organization has been approved by the ASI Codes and Bylaws Committee.

Currently, if a fraternity wants to start at Cal Poly, IFC does not have the power to restrict it, but can only impose a delay in its acceptance into IFC.

"If this bill were passed no organization (fraternity, sorority) would come on this campus without the consent of IFC," said Alberstein.

He said that the bill lays out certain criteria for a fraternity to be accepted into IFC. The criteria include "total number and size of Cal Poly fraternity membership, rush participation and 'pledging trends' and the total number of membership of sororities relative to that of fraternity membership," said Alberstein.

In order for a sorority to organize a chapter, it must be invited by Panhellenic at a time when Panhellenic is ready to expand, said Alberstein.

There are now seven sororities in existence on the Cal Poly campus. However, one addition was last fall.

In the past two years the number of fraternities on campus has doubled and IFC will be ab­ sorbing four new fraternities in the next year and one quarter, said Alberstein.

Some of these fraternities have been functioning as non-IFC fraternities for more than two years, he said. Once these fraternities are let into IFC, there will be 19 total fraternities in IFC, said Walt Lambert, coordinator of greek affairs. There are also three other fraternities that have recently started as colonies and are going through the process to become recognized student groups.

"They (fraternities) are expanding way beyond our resources," said Lambert.

A question was raised at the meeting over what would be done about fraternities who wished to organize but did not wish to become a part of IFC.

"There is not a single national fraternity that would back you unless your goal was to become a part of IFC," said Alberstein.

IFC also has no governing power to enforce IFC rules on fraternities that are not members of IFC. Examples are IFC's par­ ty policy, which prohibits any IFC fraternity from throwing an open party, maintaining the Poly "P", and participating in the IFC escort service, said Alberstein.

This also poses problems within the community because of the high visibility of greeks.

The expansion of fraternities is not unique to Cal Poly. Other schools, especially on the West Coast, have experienced tremendous growth in the past years, said Lambert.

Lambert said he is in contact with at least ten other national fraternities who have expressed interest in colonizing at Cal Poly.

Information groups relocated at Farmer's

By Doug DiFranco

Local groups seeking to disseminate information to Thurs­ day night Farmer's Market patrons will now have to receive spaces on Higuera Street, instead of being limited to Garden Street.

Many groups felt that being limited to distribute information on Garden Street, and not the more populous Higuera Street, was an infringement of freedom of speech.

Dodie Williams, administrator for the San Luis Obispo Business Improvement Association, said that some information groups have "been less inclined to follow the guidelines for Thursday night activities set by the BIA."

Williams said that only the "citizens groups" who have vio­ lated BIA regulations, but added that the groups cannot lose their placement on Garden Street, defined the rules and moved their booths or tables to Higuera, presenting safety and organiza­ tional problems.

Williams, who said she had received a number of "threats" and "suspicious phone calls" from groups accusing her of having a public access to their information, decided to ask the City Council to provide guidance.

At Tuesday's meeting, the council decided to allow a number of spaces on Higuera Street to be allotted for information groups. The rest, Williams said, must set up on Garden Street.

The groups will rotate into the available Higuera spaces so that every group has equal access to the high-volume foot traffic on the street.

The reason the BIA once limited information groups to setting up on Garden Street, Williams said, is because the crowds on Higuera made selling and receiving information difficult.

"We felt Garden Street was more conducive to the distribu­ tion of information" because there wasn't as much of a crowd, Williams said. "It was not our intent to impede free speech." Williams said the original in­ tent of Farmer's Market, now in its seventh year, was to bolster downtown merchant sales by att­ racting more people to the downtown area.

Williams said that despite the appearance of Farmer's Market being unorganized, the place­ ment of groups, whether farmers, barbecues or informational, is highly-structured and organized and takes safety and fire guidelines into consideration.

"It's important that groups stay within the structure established," said the City Council also reinstated the weekly $5 processing fee for information groups, which the council abolished last year. Williams said. Information groups present at the meeting agreed the $5 fee was fair.

This keg's for rollin', not drinkin'

Mixing three campus organizations and one keg usually means a few hours of fun. But this week three greek chapters plans an "all nighter" when their keg arrives on Thursday night and visibility about the problems associated with multiple sche­ each is the fourth keg roll for Tau Kappa Epilon, who won the 1988 Inter-Fraternity Council community service competition.

However, this is the first year that multiple sclerosis has been the benefiting charity, said Tuffer Mayeda, chairman of the event.

"Many college students aren't aware of MS, and they're a hard group to reach," he said. "We wanted to open the window for the National MS Society so they can educate people our age about the disease." According to the National MS Society. See KELO, page 6

Two rape victims 'can't wash away the terror'

By Laura Fletcher

Sexual assault is not just a crime against women. Although probably fewer in number, men are joining women in the ranks of rape survivors. They are often less likely than their female counterparts to file reports against their assailants, said Cal Poly health educator Dr. Amy Alberstein.

Craig and Beth (names have been changed) are both members of the gay community and have been sexual assaults committed by people they knew. The circumstances surrounding their experiences differ; however, their common link is that they both believe rape is a crime that happens to someone else.

"Of course the feeling is immediately no one is going to believe me or they're going to think I asked for it," Craig said of his experience. "It took me many years to realize I wasn't asking for it." Now a student at Cal Poly, Craig was sexually assaulted six years ago at age 16 by a family acquaint­ ance. He was running at a park in his hometown, unaware that it was for gays, when his stepfather's former partner approached him and invited Craig to his house for a beer.

Once there, Craig said the man proceeded to get drunk, knock him over, beat him up and anal­ rape him.

"It was really dirty. I felt used. I felt guilty. I felt that I didn't want to let anyone know," Craig said. "My first reaction was to run home and take a shower." He said he didn't tell anyone about his experience, let alone report it to a law enforcement agency, until four years later.

About 1985, Craig saw his assailant for the only time since he was assaulted, and he said the man showed no recognition of him.

"It was really strange because he knew the people I was with and had come up to say hi," he said. "I realiz­ ed it's over now and I can look at him and know I'm stronger than this, that the nightmare is over and emo­tionally I'm together." However, he said, his experience still inflicts on many of his activities, including sex which still key­ memories of the assault. Also, Craig said, he is much more wary of other men.

Craig said prior to his experience, he believed the ste­ reotype that men don't get raped. He said he thinks most people also think only weak males get raped or col­ ones who were gay and then changed their minds. "They don't think society is ready and willing to accept the men yet," he said. "The men don't even want to think it happens to men, so they aren't out dealing with the things they should in some way."

Beth is a recent Cal Poly graduate who was raped last October while still in the San Luis Obispo area by some­ one she had known for several months. She said the two were like sister and brother, although he had expressed a desire for a more serious relationship.

YAF is misunderstood

By Matthew Wisbey

The following is in response to "YAF insist's divisive philosophy" that appeared in the May 23 Commentary section.

It seems Young Americans for Freedom is one of the most misunderstood groups at Cal Poly. As a consequence, this ignorance leads to blind bigotry born out of fear of opposing viewpoints. Allow me to explain what YAF stands for.

First of all, YAF stands for freedom of individuals without being subject to unjust arbitrary force, provided their actions do not destroy someone else of these same inalienable rights. YAF believes the constitutional republic form of government is one in which the people are sovereign and that the Constitution is the rule of law.

YAF has come under intense criticism ever since it established itself. This statement is absurd in light of seven decades of history. First, communism has produced the most brutal system ever to govern a nation. The only pre-amendment to the Constitution has already been done. When communism has been proven guilty, then the whole experiment can be put down for good.

It has been said that YAF is paranoid about communism. This is far from the truth. YAF believes that the constitutional republican form of government is the best way yet devised by man to secure the basic rights of freedom. Several other forms of government have been attempted but all have been dismal failures.

Let's have an example. When the United States was a constitutional republic it was a nation. During times of peace, the commissars killed more than 100 million people. The West killed fewer than 40 million. The Western media has successfully duped the ignorant populace into thinking Mikhail Gorbachev is a man of peace in the East. YAF believes the constitutional republican form of government is the best way yet devised by man to secure the basic rights of freedom.

Editor — In anticipation of other letters to the editor, I would like to make a response to Besor's article, "Student maintains his innocence in rape," (May 24), on behalf of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity.

Albanese takes aim at nationals

By Kathryn Brunello

Jesse Jackson espouses, not YAF.

With her sights set on the 1992 Olympic trials, Gina Albanese of the Cal Poly women’s track team is off and running in Hampton, Virginia. There, she will attempt to beat her best time of 59.77 in the 400-meter hurdles at the Division II championships.

Albanese holds the top Division II time in her event this year. In addition to the 400-meter hurdles, she will also run in the mile relay.

Last year she was an All-American in the 400-meter hurdles after placing seventh at the Division II nationals in Texas. She was running third near the end of the race when she fell over a hurdle. She still managed to get up and finish seventh, enabling her to be named an All-American.

Albanese, 20, is from Brannham High School in San Jose. She began running track as a freshman in high school. “My parents have been a great inspiration to me,” she said.

Albanese looked at Division I track programs when she graduated from high school, but chose Cal Poly instead. Her reasons for coming here were because Cal Poly is centrally located (between San Francisco and Los Angeles), it has access to Division I competition, and because it is known to have a perennially strong track program.

With a successful competition in Virginia, Albanese hopes to qualify for Division I nationals coming up in two weeks.

Albanese has goals beyond the Division I nationals, however. She hopes to qualify for the 1992 Olympic trials. The qualifying time for Olympic trials is 58.8, which is less than a second faster than her personal best. She has over two years to improve on her time of 59.77, so her goal is not unrealistic.

Her teammates in the mile relay are Aeron Arlin, Teena Colebrook, Gabby McKenize and Shannin Stevens. Albanese said her plans for the national meet include nothing but winning.

The Cal Poly women’s track team recently placed first in the CCAA regional conference meet held in Poly, where Albanese took first in the 400-meter hurdles and ran on the winning mile relay team.

Cal Poly will be represented by 18 women at the nationals this year. The schools with the most athletes to qualify for the 1992 Olympic trials will be Abilene Christian and the University of Southern California, each with seven each. According to Albanese, over half of the Cal Poly athletes will compete in more than one event.

San Bernardino gas line explodes; at least two dead

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. (AP) — A geyser of gasoline erupted from a ruptured pipeline Thursday and exploded into flame, engulfing the neighborhood where a runaway train earlier this month demolished a row of houses. At least two people were killed. There was a "very good possibility" the 14-inch pipeline was damaged by the earlier train accident, said Ken Seal, manager of the Las Vegas office of the Calnev Pipeline Co.

At least 28 people were injured, three critically. Ten homes and 18 cars were destroyed and five homes were damaged in the blaze that radiated so much heat that pets and garden corn stalks were singed two blocks away. "It looks like a bomb went off over Duffy Street," City Attorney James Penman said at the scene, across the street from where the train destroyed six houses on May 12 and damaged five others.

"It's like a nightmare," said Delores Jones, whose house was destroyed by the fire. "I haven't slept since the train wreck. It's come back to haunt me."
Mark Kauffman shares a life of pictures with students

"I love to teach. When a student takes a good picture, I sub-consciously see it in print. For me, that is the ultimate reward."

—Mark Kauffman

Mark Kauffman started teaching at Cal Poly just three years ago, but "learn by doing" has been this full-time lecturer's motto for life. "You can't learn photography from books," said Kauffman, and with more than 50 years of photographic experience under his belt, he knows what he is talking about.

Most of Kauffman's career was spent as a photographer for LIFE magazine for 40 years. He got his first cover on LIFE when he was 17 years old with a picture of Eleanor Roosevelt. Since then, he's photographed everyone from Winston Churchill to Paul Newman. Named Photographer-of-the-Year in 1953 (presented to him by Encyclopedia Britannica and the University of Missouri), Kauffman built a career around communicating with America through his award-winning pictures. Now Kauffman communicates with students. Although he takes his teaching seriously, he says, "I believe you can still have fun in the classroom."

It is outside the classroom where Kauffman feels his teaching is most effective. He teaches basic and advanced photography and routinely takes his students on location to "shoot" different subjects. The experience of working with Kauffman, students will agree, is invaluable.

He recently took his corporate editorial class to the Hecla workshop in San Francisco. Below: Kauffman was one of seven photographers invited to photograph the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles. Kauffman, at left, with former President Dwight Eisenhower and the photograph that won him an award from the White House.

Reynolds. The assignment was to photograph Reynolds in his studio, a meticulous job because of lighting difficulties. At the day's end, the class was worn out, giving them a taste of what to expect from a career in professional photography. "He works fast," said Shirley Beaumont, a student in Kauffman's corporate editorial class. "As students, we get caught up in that momentum because we are directly involved in the show."

Some of Kauffman's other student projects included a trip to the Firestone Winery in Santa Ynez to shoot the dark fermentation cellar and one to the PG&E facility at Morro Bay to shoot photos "that could be used in an annual report," Kauffman said.

"I tell my students that a good photographer must be a good journalist in many ways. Sometimes 90 percent of photography is getting cooperation with your subjects and getting things set up."

Kauffman teaches in the art and design department but also teaches a photo-journalism course for the journalism department. He said that's one class he wishes was longer than 12 weeks, because it takes the majority of the quarter for journalism majors to become fully comfortable with the camera. But by then, the quarter — and the fun — is nearly over.

"By the end of the quarter, the students have worked out most of their technical problems and have just begun to take good pictures."

Kauffman enjoys teaching a mix of beginning and advanced courses. "I couldn't teach strictly one or the other," he said, adding that he tries to find something good in every picture. "From there I critique the mistakes. The student then has something to build from."

He said it is rare when he cannot find something good in a picture. "All-out criticism breaks people's interest and lessens their enthusiasm."

"He can pinpoint each student's weakness and help them set goals," said sophomore Kim Laserie, a student in Kauffman's basic black-and-white photography course. "He was very encouraging. I wasn't at all intimidated by him."

During Kauffman's career he was a combat photographer and first lieutenant for the Marines. He fought and took pictures in four major battles, including Iwo Jima. He describes his photographic experience in the military as "being in the wrong place at the right time."

He was also Sports Illustrated's first photographer and was involved in the magazine's conception. "He's done it all," said Doug Highland, a photography major and student in Kauffman's advanced black and white photography course. "I wish I could hook a computer up to his brain and write everything down."

But Kauffman maintains that he is still learning how to teach. "I have difficulty sticking to my syllabus. Structure is most important in the beginning photography courses, but the subject matter of my other classes allows me to be flexible," he said.

"The only course I give a final exam in is advanced black-and-white photography, because there the students have their first introduction to artificial lighting, which is central to professional photography."

Kauffman said teaching at Cal Poly has been "completely positive."

"All four of the photography instructors come from different backgrounds, and we complement each other's style, benefiting the students." Kauffman, who will be 67 in September, plans to teach at Cal Poly for at least three more years "or until they kick me out," he said smiling.
