Bicycle restrictions decision coming soon
By Ken Eland

Restrictions on bicycle use and the elimination of skateboarding are two parts of a proposal awaiting final decision at a review committee meeting this Friday.

If approved, the entire plan is sent to Cal Poly President Warren Baker for final approval.

The law could be in effect as early as Sept. 18.

The regulation and violation of the proposed law will be covered on Via Carta, by the Graphic Arts department.

The inner campus is defined as the inner-areas of Cal Poly that is shaped like a horseshoe, enclosed by North and South Perimeter Roads. The closed-looped end is just below the Administration Building, "the open part is south of Via Carta, by the Graphic Arts Building," Schumacher said.

The green bike lane currently on Via Carta will be left alone. Schumacher said signs will be posted to let bike riders know it's illegal to ride in there. "They're talking about painting the international sign on the pavement," Schumacher said.

The international sign in this case would be a painted bike in a circle with a slash through it.

"As soon as the signs go up, we would get about 50 percent compliance," Schumacher said.

The rest of the violators will be educated through campus literature. If this doesn't work, they will be cited.

"The new bicycle use law will do three things," said James Lundreth, Cal Poly vice president of business affairs. "The new policy, if implemented, will call for the posting of signs, which will state "No bicycle riding," second, move the bike racks that are now there and third, advise and or ticket violators.

Perhaps the most significant reason to ban the bicycles from the inner campus, aside from past accidents, is the rate of speed bicyclists attain as they ride from the Sandwich Plant past the postal kiosk and through cross traffic.

"We get about 30 bike-related accidents a year," Schumacher said.

"The needle is used once per person, and then it is thrown out," said Linda Schumacher, Tri-Counties Blood Bank director.

"One pint or 16 ounces of blood is taken from the donor and then sent to be be tested. The donor must weigh more than 110 pounds and be 17-years-old or older.

When reserves run out it takes up to one business day to get the correct blood type for the transfusion, Fuller said. "As soon as the signs go up, we would get about 50 percent compliance." Schumacher said.

The blood of students, faculty and staff is needed, said Brooke Linstrum, customer service director. She said the donor must weigh more than 110 pounds and be 17-years-old or older.

Pete Rose may have a future as a bookie for aardvark highjumping

By Rob Lorenb

Pete Rose, Pete Rose, Pete Rose.

Pete Rose bet on baseball. Pete Rose bet on the Cincinnati Reds. Pete Rose bet on yak races in the Himalayas. Pete Rose bet on whether his third baseman would tie his left shoe or his right shoe first.

When will we let this thing rest? The media and Pete's problems. A marriage made in heaven. And I'm depressed. I mean, I feel as if Pete had one of the greatest baseball players of all time and that this scandal might hurt his chances of taking his deserved spot in the Baseball Hall of Fame. But I don't want to talk about the hall of fame. He is a ball-of-famer. Forget that. Therefore, and therefore no discussion.

What I want to talk about is, did he or did he not bet on baseball? I think he did, and all of the evidence seems to point to that conclusion. A large number of well-known sources say that Pete who sold drugs and are therefore reputable and honest because their minds are clear and pure say that Pete bet on his own team. One source said that Pete would call him up and say something like "Yo, Paul, I'm going to lay $5,000 down on our game against the Braves. I like our chances against this team. Oh yeah, and I could lay down another two grand down on Efrem from the Emu in the trans-Africa wilds animal race. I think of Efrem will be able to stick close to the hare's ass and make a break for it around Zambia."

So that's the drug salesman said it. But Pete's in massive debt. Maybe he made stupid bets like "I'll take Atlanta in a four-game series sweep of the Giants in San Francisco for $50,000 and I'll also take the armadillo for a hundred grand."

Maybe, therefore, this honest drug salesman who is in prison for drug trafficking but still is the pillar of respectability and trust (gasp) lying for publicity or, even better, for a reduction in his sentence for his cooperation. He's thinkin' "If I tell them Pete Rose bet on Pete's fabulous career, I may be able to get out early and resume my very lucrative drug trade."

Okay, Okay, so any number of other respectable criminals have corroborated the main source's stories, and things are lookin' pretty grim for Pete. A. Bartlett Giamatti, the commish, is breathin' the blood. By the way, does the commish go by Bart, the Big A, Bartlett, Yo Giamatti, or simply Ey'? I've always wondered about that.

But anyway. Bart baby wants Pete's butt, and he's going to get it, and I'll tell you why. If A. didn't have anything on Pete, he would have gone public and exonerated Rose and ended all of the negative publicity. But the big man with the many beard and the Ivy-league degree hasn't said a peep, and therefore Pete's guilty until he proves otherwise. I know that's backward for this country, but I think Pete blew it to begin with and deserves what he gets.

When the whole story broke, Pete could have gone to the Big Ac (Anthony Salerno, the commish) and told him "Hey, listen Bart, I have a problem. I'm addicted to gambling. I need help. Please help me?" And A. would have punished Pete, but he would not have banned him from baseball, which is what Pete Rose is facing now.

But instead, Pete maintains his innocence, and when it turns out that he was actually slapping thousands down on Reds baseball, he's going to lose the rest of his dwindling respectability, not to mention his remaining loyal fans.

But Pete will have things to do when he's out of baseball, probably for life. I'll bet he's too late for that. I think he'll drop from sight for a few years and resurface in Monte Carlo as a bookie. He'll handle European horse races, sports competitions, tiddlywink tournaments, high jumping events. Anything to keep him around gambling.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Where does the dishonesty begin?

Editor:

We would like to start off by asking Ms. Williams if she feels there is a liberal bias in the media (Academic dishonesty at Cal Poly, Aug. 3). When you state there is dishonesty in Cal Poly academics, you are contradicting yourself when you go on to mention "excellent courses in Central and Latin America." Throughout this university there are a multitude of persuasions regarding the "Big Picture," as you call it. We have liberal and conservative economists, political scientists, historians, philosophers, etc. We argue that true education is learning to recognize these persuasions or "biases" of those teachers and the material they present in order to remain unbiased. However, Ms. Williams, it is always important to keep an open mind as long as doing so contributes to journalism and does not equate your tactics with that of today's "trash T.V." journalism.

Bus service to extend hours in fall

By Christine Kohn
Staff Writer

A city bus route that services Cal Poly's core will have extended hours beginning in the fall quarter, a San Luis Obispo transit representative said.

SLO Transit Route Four, which circles Cal Poly, downtown San Luis Obispo and Laguna Lake, will run five minutes earlier in the morning (6:23 a.m.) and two hours later in the evening (10:40 p.m.) to accommodate more passengers, SLO Transit representative Janet Zalewski said. The additional routes will bring students to school in time for 7 a.m. classes, Zalewski said, and accommodate students who want to stay downtown later.

University students, faculty and staff are able to ride free on SLO Transit buses anywhere in the city due to an agreement between Cal Poly and the city. All other bus riders must pay 50 cents per ride. Zalewski said the university pays the city for the service out of parking fines collected on campus.

Bus service will run Monday through Thursday.

Louie disagrees with, is search and seizure of employees and random drug testing. "No one has a life threatening job here," Louie said. "If somebody does drugs and puts a phone in wrong, I surely hope they get fired, but I don't see how it's going to threaten someone where they (Pacific Bell) would have to do these things." Repeated phone calls by the Mustang Daily to representatives at California Pacific Bell headquarters in San Francisco were not returned.

Housing costs and regulations may raise rents
By Kenn Easlend

Not long ago in San Luis Obispo, the average monthly rent for a one bedroom apartment was about slightly more than $400. Those days are gone.

A preliminary report from Cal Poly Housing indicates some students will face rent increases this fall. The average monthly rent for a one bedroom apartment is now almost $450, compared to a year ago at $407, said Robert Bostrom, director for the housing office.

Similarly, the cost of renting a one bedroom house is up from $429 to $487 a month. Realtors say it is inevitable that renters will experience at least one rent increase during their four year stay in San Luis Obispo.

However, one form of renting has increased the least. The current average price for a room in a house is only $232 where the total rent is divided by the amount of rooms in the house.

Another form of renting is the shared room, where two people share the expenses of one room. That, too, has increased, Bostrom said.

In an effort to discourage student overcrowding in single family housing, San Luis Obispo is considering limiting the number of renters in a house. This is already in effect in another college town, Davis.

The Davis housing plan could have an impact on renters here if voted into law.

Rents could also increase because of the proposed growth limit. San Luis Obispo is growing at 4 percent per year, compared to California's 2.5 percent growth rate. The goal of the proposed county growth limit is to match the state's growth. "If that happens," said realtor Gary Holdgrafer Jr., "prices will go up for sure." Many blame inflation, greed, or inflated property prices as the cause for the rent increases.

Holdgrafer said a house near Poly is more in demand, consequently making the rent higher there compared to another part of town, such as the Laguna Lake area.

"The Davis plan could force rent up. It's supply and demand; if more students are forced into the market, then rents will go up," said realtor Gary Holdgrafer Jr. Rents could also increase because of the proposed growth limit.

San Luis Obispo is growing at 4 percent per year, compared to California's 2.5 percent growth rate. The goal of the proposed county growth limit is to match the state's growth. "If that happens," said realtor Paul Buschur, "prices will go up for sure." Many blame inflation, greed, or inflated property prices as the cause for the rent increases.

Holdgrafer said a house near Poly is more in demand, consequently making the rent higher there compared to another part of town, such as the Laguna Lake area.

As well as location being a determining factor for demand, price is an important consideration for the renter.

"Hopefully, renters will not move into a place where the landlord is charging a lot of rent. The rent will be lowered when the landowner sees it can't be rented at that price," said Bostrom.

He agreed, however, that some people will pay the higher rent, which has an increasing effect on rental prices.

Another payment besides rent has increased in this area. Property prices have increased almost 30 percent this year, said Bostrom.

After this happened I went into the judicial hearing officer's office and told him what had happened. In this case it was a very easy process because the suspect had not left the scene. It meant that we could tell without a doubt whose sperm it is. Hurwitz said there are specific methods used for coding DNA so the doctors can tell you whether you have been raped or not. When he left my room, I told him I didn't want to see any of his bad qualities. I said that he had done to me, but I tried to forget it. It only got worse the next morning when I woke up and realized exactly what had happened. I felt awful. I tried to forget about it. For the next couple of years, I kept seeing each other off and on. It was nothing serious, but every time we got together he would try to get me to have sex with him, even though I told him I wasn't ready. Every time he would say "O.K." and stop trying. I liked him, so I guess I didn't want to hurt him's feelings.

One night I was in my dorm room in bed. I left my door unlocked for my roommate, I had just moved in. I had been drinking earlier so I just wanted to go to sleep. A little while later my door opened and we started kissing. He started to take my underwear off but I thought they were asleep, so I began to cry. I went to the police and told him what had happened. It means that 14 of the attackers were members of fraternities. In Julie's story, the male was such a great guy. I told my little sister in the sorority about it. She felt so much for me because we are so close to us is raped it makes us have to consider it may happen to us, too. Not believing me.

The other reason why people don't often hear about date rape is because when people do report it or even tell a friend, listeners don't believe them. This may be hard for people who have never experienced it to believe, but Hurwitz, Cousins, and Julie all agree friends often don't believe the survivor's story and make it seem like less important than they don't consider it a sex crime." He said that men are taught to be powerful and controlling. "It's not going to be an easy process," Cousins said, "But we are striving to make this problem something that has just happened in the past couple of years. He said stranger rapists get all the attention. But if it was a girl who was raped by her boyfriend, no one would care. He said that the victim's pubic hair for the attacker's pubic hair; and check for abrasions in the vagina. Hurwitz said there are specific methods used for coding DNA so the doctors can tell without a doubt whose sperm it is.

Hurwitz said the most important thing for the survivor to do is seek professional counseling. Many survivors experience Post-Rape Trauma Syndrome (PRTS), she said. Symptoms of this include: irritability, sleeping disorders, changes in drug or alcohol use, change in sexual habits (especially if the survivor is a virgin before the rape), depression, alcohol and drug abuse, and feeling guilty. Hurwitz said there are specific methods used for coding DNA so the doctors can tell without a doubt whose sperm it is.

...he told me I should just be happy..."

Cousins said that a lot of organizations are in "high risk" environments. He said that in the Greek system in particular, people want to fit into the group, and that certain things are the cost of admission. These costs are often things that maybe someone would not normally do such as having that one extra drink or walking home with that guy you barely know because your peers introduced you to him thinking you'd make a "cute" couple.

"In groups like fraternities and sororities you have some real up-front expectations and then there are the hidden expectations," said Cousins. Cousins points out that the Greeks are not the only organizations that face these expectations and several of the fraternities and sororities are doing some "fantastic things now" like Greeks Against Rape. But Cousins said that they could have taken action before they were being accused.

"They (fraternities and sororities) could have been at the forefront of all the action," Cousins said. "But they waited until their advisors told them they should get involved."

Cousins, Hurwitz and Julie are among a group of individuals who realize there is no overnight solution to this problem, but that "that's a rarity in a decade in which college costs have consistently exceeded the nation's overall inflation rate — a fact that has led critics like former U.S. Education Secretary William Bennett to sharply question college management."

College costs expected to rise

NEW YORK — The decade-long surge in college costs is moderating slightly this fall with average tuitions heading 5 percent to 9 percent higher, according to a College Board survey released Wednesday.

Total annual costs at the priciest private schools will now exceed $21,000.

Still, the annual survey had welcome news for at least some beleaguered students and parents: Tuition and fees at two-year public colleges will rise an average of 5 percent to $5824, a bit under the 5.9 percent annualized rise in consumer prices during the first six months of 1989.

That's a rarity in a decade in which college costs have consistently exceeded the nation's overall inflation rate — a fact that has led critics like former U.S. Education Secretary William Bennett to sharply question college management.

SUICIDE ATTACK WOUNDS CONVOY

BERUT, Lebanon — A suicide bomber attacked an Israeli convoy in south Lebanon on Wednesday, wounding six people in what the pro-Iranian Hezbollah called a down payment for Israel's abduction of a Shiite Moslem cleric.

Hezbollah said a Shiite clergyman drove the explosives-laden pickup truck.

It also said the seizure of Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid hampered efforts to free the 16 Western captives in Lebanon, eight of whom are Americans. Hezbollah is believed to be an umbrella organization of the majority of the pro-Iranian enemies of Israel.

"The $150,000 and under house in San Luis Obispo is just not there anymore," Holdgrafe said.

Both Holdgrafe and Buscher said they did not think current property prices had an increasing effect on student rent... at least not yet.

San Luis Obispo County does not have rent control, which means the landlord could raise the rent with each new contract.

But there is a ceiling on rent, which is a product of supply and demand, said Buscher.

"Ideally, the landlord every month wants to roll over 1 percent of the purchase price to the renters, but when a house is selling for $200,000, that means the renters would pay $2,000 a month, and that type of rent won't fly," he said.

Even the rent at Cal Poly's student halls has increased by 1 percent per month, but there is a cap on that increase.

The on-campus 'housin' rent increased $84 from $1683 for an annual contract year, said Buscher.

The housing rent money goes toward paying items such as groundskeeping, roof-repair contracts and housing office salaries.

"We receive no tax dollars. The residence halls are self-sufficing," Buscher said.

The residence halls have 2,795 bed spaces, "and we are all filled up," Buscher said.

Only about 1,500 students live at home, Buscher said, leaving more than 11,000 students who live in or around the city of San Luis Obispo who would potentially be effected by a rent hike.
