Changes made for fundraiser

Thrash-a-thon problems down, successes up

By Kelly Hagerty

Although the future of Lambda Chi Alpha's Thrash-a-thon may have looked bleak last year, this year's event caused few problems.

The fraternity was told after last year's event that they couldn't hold the skateboarding fundraiser on Cal Poly's campus because of problems experienced in past years. Such problems included skateboarding on campus, garbage in the University Union plaza and illegal parking, said Allan Yang, associate vice-president for Student Affairs.

Lambda Chi Alpha was given a notice by the university that it no longer could hold this event to raise money for the American Cancer Society. That announcement prompted action by the fraternity, said Thrash-a-thon Chairman Mike McIntyre.

Lambda Chi Alpha submitted a proposal to the university stating that the fraternity would make adjustments in the event that would alleviate any problems incurred by the event.

This proposal included cutting back the hours of the event from the original 72 hours to 48 hours. Skateboarding would stop at midnight and begin the next morning at 7 a.m. The proposal also stated that the fraternity would have clean-up crews for the U.U. area, provide an additional restroom in the U.U. and provide rule enforcement and security during the event.

This proposal was turned into a contract that granted permission for the event to be held on

Education center emerges to improve training for teachers

By Katie Cooper

The School of Professional Studies and Education no longer exists under this title. After a re-organization by university administrators this fall, a new Center for Teacher Education was created, leaving the School of Professional Studies as a separate entity.

The faculty from the education department automatically will become part of the center. Faculty from the academic department on campus who are responsible for single-subject teacher education programs (in liberal arts, science, math) also will be incorporated into the center.

The Center for Teacher Education was formed in September following extensive discussion among several different groups. Among these groups were people from the central administration, deans from teacher education, faculty from the education department and superintendents of local school districts.

Vice President for Academic Affairs Glenn Irvin said he hopes the center will serve as a base for students and faculty and improve training for teachers.

Obscenity laws have a purpose

It's too bad that David Martin hasn't a clue to the meaning of that word. And that's a sad commentary on a society that has been under scrutiny.

In his letter (Oct. 12), he seemingly holds the absolute view that all speech, no matter what the content, is protected by the First Amendment. Unfortunately, this isn't how it's like in the real world. The First Amendment is not absolute. All speech is not protected. This has been evident in recent cases by the various courts of law. We are not a true democracy and we do not have an absolute view. Was the First Amendment not under scrutiny when the content was obscene? Does Martin believe that every person has a right to freedom of speech, even if he or she has been caught with a drug or gun? He misinterprets the meaning of the First Amendment.

In a society where the majority enjoys the freedom of the minority, you have to remember that the majority has rights. Like you said, a majority of the people may not like the music of 2 Live Crew. Your solution is "If you don't like it, don't buy it." That's your appeal, but it's not the law.

The law in Florida says that obscene sex is defined as the material declared obscene in a person's home. We are not at liberty to disregard it. If you don't like the law, then challenge it in court. Better yet, go to Tallahassee and tell the lawmakers how you feel.

Get off your butt and do something. Don't be the moron that complains but doesn't do anything.

Oops, too late.

Fairness Board shows no biases

I want to thank and commend David Bock for his excellent article on the Fairness Board (Oct. 11). It was quite informative and well-written, and I trust that it will make many people aware of the existence and the role of the Fairness Board.

I want to clarify one small point in the article which might cause some confusion. The Fairness Board clearly states that it is to remain "neutral in treatment of both sides." What I intended to say is that, since being a serious accusation, the Board tries to assure that evidence of any protection in such cases by giving them a certain "benefit of the doubt." At the same time, our charter directs us to presume that the instructor's grade is correct, unless there is clear evidence to the contrary.

Probably it would be most accurate to say that we try not to lean toward either position, but simply to be as fair as possible.

AIDS education must be priority

Cal Poly's Biology Department should be embarrassed to have produced a student like Eric Jacobsen, who "exposes" such powerful ignorance of the AIDS virus. Moreover, that this misguided soul is planning a carrier in medicine shows the dire need for AIDS education. Educating the public is the only way to stamp out discrimination against AIDS patients and remove the fear that causes such ridiculous persecution. Ignorance breeds fear — the foundation of discrimination.

No one can get AIDS disease by bedding in the same room with a carrier, or having sexual relations with the same toilet facilities, kissing

Israel rejects appeals to cooperate with U.N.

JERUSALEM (AP) — A defiant Israel on Tuesday rejected appeals by British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd to find a way to cooperate with a U.N. inquiry into the Temple Mount killings.

However, Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek said he was willing to meet with a U.N. fact-finding team if it comes to Jerusalem to look into the fatal police shootings of at least 18 Palestinians on Oct. 8.

"I think that I am secure (enough) in our intentions and with the situation in Jerusalem, that whoever comes here I can receive them and answer them," Kollek told Jerusalem, that whoever comes here I can receive them and answer them," Kollek told Jerusalem.

A spokesperson for Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said Shamir refused. He quoted the prime minister as saying: "This resolution is our capital, and we don't see any reason for us to cooperate with a U.N. inquiry into the Temple Mount shootings from Jerusalem to find a compromise on the U.N. inquiry.

Government officials said Hurd, in his meeting with Levy, suggested that Jerusalem separate the U.N. Security Council condemnation of the Temple Mount shootings from the call for an investigation.

NEW YORK (AP) — Three members of a Vietnamese gang known as Born to Kill were shot to death, and police said the slayings may stem from turf wars with longer established Chinese gangs.

The victims, all in their early 20s but not immediately identified, were found shot in the head at dawn Monday in an outdoor parking lot near three blocks from City Hall.

Investigators found three .380-caliber shell casings at the scene, said Officer Scott Bloch, a department spokesperson.

He said one of the victims had a tattoo of BTK, for Born to Kill, and a second bore a tattoo that he described as "associated with BTK."

In a widely publicized incident late in July, gunmen posting as mourners at the New Jersey burial of a BTK member from Chinatown opened fire with several weapons. Seven of the 100 or so people there for the burial were wounded by gunfire, and seven more were injured in the panic.

On Oct. 1, a 27-year-old Vietnamese man was shot to death when at least two gunmen sprayed a crowded Chinatown street with more than a dozen rounds of .38mm bullets. Police said the slain man was a member of a gang other than BTK but his killers may have been from BTK, an extortion gang.

Sex offender denied appeal for probation

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A Sonoma County man who described an upbringing in which incest was a way of life was denied probation Tuesday in his conviction for sexually molesting three of his young nieces.

The state Court of Appeal agreed with the trial court and a psychiatric report that Steven Rea Jr. was a dangerous pedophile and ineligible for probation under guidelines set down by California law.

A probation report quoted Rea as saying he had been sodomized by family members, forced to orally copulate his cousins, was seduced into sexual intercourse with his sisters, witnessed his father's molestation of his sisters, and noted a sexual relationship between his father and his grandmother and other relatives.

Rea pleaded guilty in Sonoma County Superior Court to three counts of lewd and lascivious acts on the three niece victims, then aged six and nine, in molestations that continued for several years. He was convicted June 11, 1989 and sentenced to 10 years in prison.

HIV information must be correct

Mr. Jacobsen's mixing of medical and human rights issues is most unfortunate (Oct. 15). The Stanford administration decided to allow the same sexed couples to live in student housing is not remotely related to the issue of AIDS. By sanctioning of coupled relationships, the probability of HIV transmission is reduced.

Eric intimates that the AIDS epidemic is out of control due to "powerful lobbies and special interest groups such as ACT-UP and Stanford's gay coalition" who are placing innocent patients in unnecessary high risk conditions by keeping test results private.

Within an ignorant society, the need for privacy is of the utmost importance because dying of AIDS and suffering needless persecution is more than anyone should bear.

Social science major Andrew Ovenden returns to Cal Poly after service in Peace Corps

By Michele Morris

Andrew Ovenden got that chance. He served as an intern last summer for the Peace Corps in the Philippines and Thailand. He is the first and only Cal Poly student to serve as a Peace Corps intern, since most volunteers are accepted without college credits.

The Peace Corps, started by John F. Kennedy in 1961, is an organization that provides other countries with United States volunteers who do everything from teaching to forming to building houses. Volunteers serve a two-year term.

Ovenden's summer began with a three-day orientation at the Peace Corps office in Washington, D.C. He and four other interns from various parts of the United States were given the chance to meet with the country desk officer for the country they would be going to. They also talked to returned Peace Corps volunteers and staff counselors who specialize in helping new volunteers with mental preparation for service.

They were given two days of technical training on Peace Corps computer software and were introduced to the Peace Corps library classification system. While the other interns went to Belize, Tunga, Morocco and Mali, Ovenden was assigned to the Philippines to work in the Technical Resource Center at the Peace Corps' main office in Manila. His duties included, but were not limited to, updating the Volunteer's Resource Directory data base, a listing of contact people and agencies involved with various facets of development work in the Philippines. The directory needed continuous updating, Ovenden said.

Before we learned of the incident, we were told in the case of something like a coup d'etat, the safest place to be is at our site, or with our host family or coworkers. But after we learned of the incident, we were forbidden to say anything to our host family or coworkers.

Upon arriving in Manila, they were told that one Japanese volunteer was kidnapped, and another volunteer who was honeymooning had not been heard from. He had been kidnapped also. Both were in captivity for about two months and then released.

After the press was notified of the hostage situation, Aquino invited the volunteers and the staff to Malacanang Palace. Because Ovenden's name wasn't on all of the security lists, he had to watch on television monitors outside the room and catch occasional glimpses when the door opened, but many volunteers and staff members were able to speak with Aquino.

Shortly after, he was informed by Peace Corps headquarters that he would spend his remaining two months in Thailand. His main job was to compile materials for an environmental education package and build up a library of environmental publications, videos and other audio-visual material.

First, Ovenden requested material from numerous environmental agencies in Thailand and in the United States. He visited many organizations in Bangkok, including the United Nations Environmental Program, UNICEF, United Nations Development Fund and Agriculture Organization, World Wildlife Fund and those in charge of the transportation system in Bangkok.

Ovenden said one book that proved to be very valuable, especially to educate children, is Dr. Seuss' "The Lorax," because of its emphasis on saving trees. Another Peace Corps volunteer developed an environmental education lesson plan that includes the book. Ovenden began discussions with a staff member of the United Nations Environmental Program in Bangkok to explore the lesson plan for a discount on several classroom sets of "The Lorax" book and videos.

Ovenden said because Thailand's forestland is in serious trouble, education of young people is important. Since World War II, the area of Thailand that is covered by virgin forest has been significantly reduced, he said. In his research, Ovenden found that this destruction of forestland is leading to a devastation of the wildlife and genetic diversity there.

Ovenden also had the responsibility of answering volunteers' questions about technical publications and other books or information. This job required reorganizing the Peace Corps Library. "I do not expect the effect of my endeavors in this area to last long after I leave," he said.

Another of his projects was the set up and maintenance of a new Macintosh computer in the library. Since few people in Asia use these computers, it is difficult to find repair centers or any support for people who use them, he said.

Lastly, with the help of a volunteer who works at the World Wildlife Fund in Thailand, Ovenden constructed a slide show on the exploitation of wildlife in Thailand. Once the slides were reproduced, he figured out a system for checking them out so the sets would receive the same treatment as the other material in the library.

Ovenden said the project that brought him the greatest frustration this summer was interacting with the locals in Thailand and the Philippines.

"I have to admit although I fell in love with the Thai people and their culture, communication and social interaction on a higher than superficial level was severely limited," Ovenden said. "I found ordering meals to be a frustrating experience."

From page 3 growth," he said. "They face the same forces facing Butte County." Wall testified at a hearing Tuesday by the Assembly Local Government Committee on local government financing. The Legislature is not in session and the committee held the informa­tion hearing to seek suggestions for bills for the 1991 session. The legislators and the local government representatives present agreed that last sum­mer's state fiscal crisis is likely to be repeated next summer, since the underlying problems were not fixed. Likewise, Butte County last month did not file bankruptcy as threatened because of a last-minute state bailout, but its problems also were not addressed and will recur. Wall said counties like Butte and San Diego have well-publicized financial problems, while high-speed counties seemed to be surviving. Counties' main problem, he said, is their dual nature. They are both arms of the state, re­quired to provide services such as health care and welfare, and municipal agencies, mandated to provide fire and police protec­tion. "The state obligations en­croach or crowd out the local obligations. Both of those roles are important," Wall said. He said solutions are hampered by the interrelationship of local agencies. Any shifting of funds to one agency, such as counties, usually hurts another, such as cities or special districts.

Smoking ban defeated in L.A.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The City Council defeated a proposal to ban smoking in restaurants, a law that would have made Los Angeles the nation's first major metropolis to snuff cigarettes and cigars in dining rooms.

Councilmember Marvin Braude, who authored laws that prohibit smoking in super­markets, elevators and at public meetings, proposed the restaur­ant smoking ban in 8,600 enteries citywide.

"The time has come to prohibit smoking in restaurants," Braude told the City Council.

But Braude's proposal was defeated on a 6-6 vote. Small cities have passed the same smoking bans, including San Luis Obispo, Sacramento and Aspen, Colo., but Los Angeles with its nearly 4 million residents would have become the first ma­jor city to ban restaurant smoking.

Braude, who was also respon­sible for the law requiring re­staurants seating 50 or more to set aside half their tables for non-smokers, said that law doesn't work.

"Separating smokers from non-smokers in the same room doesn't do the job. The smoke goes back and forth. The surgeon general says separating will not work. The only responsible public policy is an end to smoking in restaurants," he said.

The ordinance was patterned after a 1988 Beverly Hills law prohibiting restaurant smoking. That law was later rejected because of a drop in business.

"It once was considered that brain tumors reached a peak rate (among people in their 30s) and then would rapidly decline in the older population, but it now appears that the incidence continues to increase with age," said Nigel H. Greig, a National Institute on Aging researcher. "I think it is alarming."

In a study to be published today in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute, Greig and three co-authors report that the rate of brain cancer appears to have increased by up to sixfold for elderly age groups in 1985 compared to the rates measured from 1973 to 1974.

For persons aged 75 to 79, the rate increased 187 percent, the study finds. For those aged 80 to 84, the rate went up by 394 percent, and the rate of increase was 501 percent for those aged 85 and older.

Primary brain cancer rates showed little change in 1985 among younger U.S. population groups, said Greig.

"In virtually all other age groups, the incidence rates were approximately the same as in 1974," he said. "But these groups (the elderly) had a dramatic increase. It is a large rise over a 10 to 15 year period.

Man gets accent following stroke

NEW YORK (AP) - A Baltimore man suddenly began speaking with a Scandinavian accent after suffering a stroke, displaying a rare condition in which a brain malfunction produces speech alterations that sound like a foreign accent. Other reported cases in Americans have involved apparent German, Spanish, Welsh, Scottish, Irish and Italian accents.

The man had what's known as foreign accent syndrome, a rare condition in which a brain malfunction produces speech alterations that sound like a foreign accent. Other reported cases in Americans have involved apparent German, Spanish, Welsh, Scottish, Irish and Italian accents.

The syndrome is triggered by bleeding in the brain, head injuries or strokes. A stroke is a blockage of blood supply to an area of the brain.

Scientists say studying the syndrome may reveal secrets about how particular parts of the brain contribute to spoken language.

Tippett spoke in a telephone interview before presenting the syndrome at the annual meeting of the American Neurological Association in San Francisco.

Immediately after the stroke, the man's speech was slurred for a day or two. His accent appeared as he recovered from that, Tippett said.

The man typically added extra vowel sounds as he spoke, saying such things as, "How are you today-uh?" Tippett said. His voice also rose in pitch at the end of sentences, as if asking a question.

Some vowel sounds were also substituted, making "hill" come out as "heel" and "quite" as "quay" with the vowel sound drawn out. "That was pronounced as "eet,"" Arnold Arraez, a Mayo Clinic speech pathologist who has evaluated about 20 people with the syndrome, said he knew of only about a dozen additional cases in the scientific literature.

Brawl over wine wrecks wedding

MILFORD, Conn. (AP) - A dispute over three cases of leftover wine at a wedding reception erupted into a brawl, which ended with the arrest of the bride's father and members of the wedding party.

Michael Callae, whose daughter was married Sunday, had paid for the wine and wanted to take it home when the reception ended. But Rolando Trovini, owner of the reception hall, said state liquor law prohibited removing liquor from the hall.

That's when the fighting started.

"We ended up being assaulted," Callae said. "Physically and psychologically battered. They decoered on us so quickly - it was the most astounding thing that's ever happened to me."

Trovini called police, who arrested Callae, 59, on charges of interfering with police, breach of peace and refusing to be fingerprinted. His daughter, Maria, 27, a bridesmaid, and his son, Frank, 23, also were arrested for interfering with police.

Two other people also were arrested.

"One can't imagine what it's like to have a wonderful wedding, marry off a daughter, expend large sums of money and have something this astounding happen," Callae said.

Trovini, owner of Sante's Manor, told police the wedding party caused $6,000 worth of damage.

"They pay for six hours of wedding - it doesn't mean they can take the place with them," he said. "There was a lot of chaos here."

Soviet economic changes slowed

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev on Tuesday scaled back plans to transform the Soviet economy, eliminating a 500-day deadline for switching to a free market system.

His action drew an angry response from rival Boris N. Yeltsin.

The president's 66-page blueprint, bearing his signature and delivered to committees of the Soviet legislature, is at least the fourth in a series of plans for revising the Soviet economy.

The latest version would give the Soviet republics new powers to run the nation's economy, free many prices to respond to market forces and allow private ownership of businesses.

Yeltsin, president of the Russian republic and Gorbachev's one-time partner in economic reform, criticized the program as an attempt "to preserve the administrative-bureaucratic system."

He said that Russia, the largest republic in the Soviet Union, might ignore the plan and set up its own currency, customs and army. Russian officials have vowed to start a 500-day transition from a planned to a free market economy.

The newest Gorbachev plan is the result of a three-week effort with top economists to work out how to alter a highly centralized system that fails to provide adequate food, shelter or services for the country's 285 million people.

"People's lives are becoming more difficult, their interest in labor is fading, their faith in the future is crumbling," the plan says.

It says the long shopping lines in which Soviets must stand daily are shameful, and acknowledge rising food prices, overcrowded apartments and empty store shelves.

Difficulties among the competing plans have touched on the underpinnings of Soviet communism: socialist property, collective labor and state ownership of all land. The conflict is so deep that the Supreme Soviet has failed to agree despite dozens of hours of debate.

Yeltsin has said that trying to merge the most radical and most conservative economic plans is like "matting a hedgehog and a snake."

He told the Russian Federation's Supreme Soviet on Tuesday it will become clear within six months that Gorbachev's latest plan is flawed. The state news agency Tass carried his remarks.

The latest plan, which Gorbachev is to present to the Supreme Soviet on Friday, sets no time limit for switching to a market economy.

He said that Russia, the largest republic in the Soviet Union, might ignore the plan and set up its own currency, customs and army. Russian officials have vowed to start a 500-day transition from a planned to a free market economy.

The newest Gorbachev plan is the result of a three-week effort with top economists to work out how to alter a highly centralized system that fails to provide adequate food, shelter or services for the country's 285 million people.

"People's lives are becoming more difficult, their interest in labor is fading, their faith in the future is crumbling," the plan says.

It says the long shopping lines in which Soviets must stand daily are shameful, and acknowledge rising food prices, overcrowded apartments and empty store shelves.

Difficulties among the competing plans have touched on the underpinnings of Soviet communism: socialist property, collective labor and state ownership of all land. The conflict is so deep that the Supreme Soviet has failed to agree despite dozens of hours of debate.

Yeltsin has said that trying to merge the most radical and most conservative economic plans is like "matting a hedgehog and a snake."

He told the Russian Federation's Supreme Soviet on Tuesday it will become clear within six months that Gorbachev's latest plan is flawed. The state news agency Tass carried his remarks.

The latest plan, which Gorbachev is to present to the Supreme Soviet on Friday, sets no time limit for switching to a market economy.

He also found getting around Bangkok, whether it be by bus or by "tuk-tuk," a three-wheeled motorcycle with a driver, to be very difficult. He said the drivers were "usually high on 'lipo,' the national pick-me-up," Lipovitan-D, a syrup made of liquid nicotine, caffeine, sugar and vitamins, to which keeps awake the drivers who work 12- or 14-hour shifts. It comes in a small brown bottle, which, Ovenden said, is the only bottle in Thailand without a return deposit. "One sees little brown bottles strewn everywhere," he said.

Out of everything he experienced, Ovenden said he found the pollution to be the most difficult thing to deal with. He said Manila was the dirtiest place he had ever been. "The Pasig River that cuts through Manila is black from the countless millions of gallons of raw, untreated sewage and industrial pollutants. One can watch with horror as young children swim in the filth," he said.

The internship is sponsored by Campus Compact, a public service agency made up of more than 400 universities nationwide and based at Brown University in Providence, Rhode Island. In order to participate, a student must have a letter of nomination from the president of the university where he or she attends. Ovenden said he didn't expect to get the internship because Cal Poly is no longer active in Campus Compact.

Cal Poly, however, does have a Peace Corps office in the Agriculture Building, room 239. Peace Corps Graduate Coordinator Jeff Carnahan said Cal Poly sends about 12 volunteers a year overseas on non-internship programs. The two-year program provides a living allowance and a readjustment allowance, which can amount to $5,400 by the end of the term. Any students who are interested in the program should contact the campus Peace Corps office at 756-5017.

Women's soccer a frustration to opposing offenses

Mustangs' defense has not allowed a goal in six games

Opposing teams, especially its forwards, aren't having field days against the Cal Poly women's soccer club. Then again, they're not exactly having good days. Okay, let's be honest. Opposing teams' offenses are nonexistent, non-threatening and nonscoring against the Mustangs. In its last six matches, Head Coach Keith Coleman's team has given up no goals while scoring 28, an indication that the team's scoring problems, evident earlier in the season, are long gone.

Last weekend, the Mustangs beat San Diego State 3-0 on Saturday and trounced the University of San Diego Sunday by a 5-0 score. Eight different players contributed to Cal Poly's scoring sprees, further illustrating the teams' depth.

In Saturday's match against the Aztecs, Coleman got goals from Katie Burch, Karol Fink and Erin McGinnis. On Sunday, Marcy Trubell, Joanne Huggins, Jill Dickey, Cynthia Collins and Michelle Milton did the damage against the Toreros.

Coleman said he attributes the shutouts mainly to his defense but also to second-year goalkeeper Eden Van Ballegooijen. "I think the defense is playing really well," Coleman said Monday night. "We're not letting many shots be taken (by opponents), and even when they do take shots, Eden is always there."

The second-year head coach credits the team's recent success — the Mustangs are 7-1-2 so far this season and 5-0-1 in the California Collegiate Women's Soccer Conference — to the team's, especially the defense's, maturity. "Basically, they're just a year older," he said. "Everything is starting to come together. It (the team's performance) has been getting steadily better, and I think we can play even better."

Coleman praised the play of Burch, Trubell, McGinnis and Fink in solving the team's scoring problems.

This weekend, the Mustangs will battle Fresno State on both Saturday and Sunday.

Last year, the Bulldogs beat the Mustangs 2-0 in a game Coleman's squad should have won. Coleman said the Bulldogs give Poly trouble for some reason, but added that he's confident the team won't suffer the same misfortune it did last season.

Forward Marcy Trubell has helped the Mustangs break out of an early-season scoring slump.
Waller said that unlike professors who judge a student by the result of his work and not by his effort, the administration gives affirmative action "an A effort" and doesn't care about the actual result. There is little encouragement or upward mobility for underrepresented faculty and staff, said Waller. Several of her friends and the people she works with have left in the seven years she has been at Cal Poly, she said, because of a "perceived lack of opportunity."

There will be an open forum for the third candidate, Anna McDonald, personnel management specialist at Fresno State, Oct. 18 at 10 a.m. in Staff Dining Room B. Candidates Karen Alvarado, affirmative action director for the City of Portland, and Cal Poly's C. Agno will be interviewed next week.

Aside from education, the center is going to integrate minorities into its program on campus. “Another purpose of the center is to bring minorities closer together,”

“The university feels with this kind of a commitment that there is a significant contribution we can make to training more efficient teachers for today’s and tomorrow’s schools.”

The Center for Teacher Education will not have its own facility on campus, but Warren said there is a rumor that the center will get office space after the re-modeling of the business building is finished.

Author to talk about race cars

Race car engineer and author Carroll Smith will give a talk on the Acura NSX on Tuesday, Oct. 23, at 7 p.m. Smith will discuss the car’s design, styling and performance.

Many people immediately seemed to think that this was a hoax. Business sophomore Jennifer Shewell was in the library’s Sowell basin and she heard about the threat. “People were joking about it as they were walking out,” she said. “No one really thinks there’s a bomb.”

Jacob Howell, 7, was looking for a book about his favorite star, Nicole, 9, when they were told they had to leave. After the evacuation, they waited outside the library entrance for their mother, Susan, to return from class at 6 p.m.

Jacob said he had his sister figured it out it was a bomb threat while they were on the way out.

“There’s probably not a bomb in there — that’s what I think,” he said.
