Poly student faces 30-day sentence for drug charge

■ Three additional charges were dropped in a plea bargain.

A Cal Poly computer science sophomore was sentenced last week to 30 days in County Jail for a drug conviction.

Gregory Trod pleaded no contest to one count of cultivation of marijuana in a plea bargain in which the district attorney's office dropped another count of cultivation and two counts of possession of marijuana with intent to sell.

The San Luis Obispo Narcotics Task Force arrested Trod at his Los Osos home on Sept. 11, 1990. Jim Christian, a task force member, said officers confiscated 20 marijuana plants valued at $3,200 each and half a pound of "baggy" marijuana.

Trod will serve his sentence during spring break and summer quarter. In addition, he was ordered to pay $1,600 in fines.

According to a spokesperson for the San Luis Obispo County Superior Court, the plea bargain arose out of a dispute over the Campus recycling group set to "roll out the barrels"

For more than 25 Cal Poly students, recycling has become more than just a personal endeavor. Everyday, these students find time to lend their conservation efforts to the campus.

They belong to the Campus Recycling Coalition. In its third year, the organization recycles about two tons of aluminum cans and glass bottles a year.

The coalition has about 30 recycling barrels at Cal Poly, mainly concentrated on the north side of campus near the Campus Store and the library.

"By next quarter, we should get new barrels in," about 40 more durable ones, CRC Chairman Rick Best said. "Then we'll start to move to the south (side of campus)."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Pedestrians must cross carefully

After reading Melissa Burkhart and Nancy Williams' letter to the editor, I felt the need to lay down some ground rules.

First, you and I paid for someone with a lot of white paint to mark the crosswalks all over the campus. These crosswalks are for pedestrians, legally to cross the street.

Second, if a pedestrian is in the crosswalk, then he or she has the legal right of way.

Third, if the student is jaywalking, then he or she is in the wrong.

Fourth, each jaywalker is worth a different bonus point value. For example, members of the track team are worth the most points. They're quick and agile enough to shuffle along in that condition.

While students loaded down with backpacks and class projects are worth the least because they're slow and targets. In fact, except for that confused look on their face as they fly over the hood, they wouldn't be worth looking at at all.

My point is: everyone has a little common courtesy. If pedestrians were a little less lazy and used the crosswalks so that motorists weren't to cross, walking every 10 feet, then I'm sure the route to the designated areas.

DMV habit of making mistakes

I have a story that makes Mr. Toriga's (Mar. 5) look like a walk in the park. About a year ago, I was pulled over for a broken taillight. The officer went through the normal routine — checked my registration, checked my proof of insurance and ran my number through the computer. He came and informed me that my license had been revoked and the reason being that I had a ticket for no insurance and a D.U.I.

"What? Are you sure?" It was obviously a mistake. I think I would have remembered getting a D.U.I.

The officer confiscated my license, made sure someone else drove and let me go. Anyway, I went to the DMV to clear things up the next morning and sure enough on my print out, there were the two citations. I wasn't going to waste the details involving getting it back, but after another 10 trips to the DMV, $10 worth of long distance calls to Sacramento, a few forms and six months later, these guys finally realized that the owner of the two tickets is a kid from Santa Anna, and they don't know how they've been put on my records. So written apology, no note, no compensation for all the time I spent in lines or waiting on the phone. Nothing accept a $10 bill for a new license. Grrrrrr!

Abandoning a parent in a nursing home is not just Rain streamed down the windshield as I approached the building. Running up the sidewalk, I opened the glass doors to find a short, shriveled woman sitting beside a tall, hump-backed man in a wheelchair. They both smiled inquisitively at me as I greeted them with a single bleep.

Hussein's troops shell Karbala, Shiite rebels

Nicosia, Cyprus (AP) — Saddam Hussein's troops shelled Shiite Muslim rebels in mosques in the besieged holy city of Karbala and killed tens of thousands elsewhere, opposition leaders reported Monday.

They said the Shiites fighters, as well as civilians trapped in the crossfire, were being slaughtered, and that 500 have been killed or wounded since Friday.

Government officials in Baghdad claimed Republican Guard troops have re-established control of the city, 100 miles south of the Iraqi capital, after several days of fierce combat.

They gave no details. But Saddam's forces appear to have been iscdating centers of resistance, such as Karbala and the southern port of Basra, and pounding them with artillery and tanks.

Karbala, famed for its mosques, is revered by Shiites as the burial place of Imam Hussein, grandson of the Prophet Mohammed and one of the sect's principal saints. It has a population of about 120,000.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Attorneys for a black man killed by racist "skinheads" want to seize donations sent to post office boxes used by Tom Metzger's White Aryan Resistance group.

A motion filed Friday in San Diego Superior Court asks that a receiver be named for the post office boxes used by Metzger and his son, John. The boxes are used to gather money in exchange for videotapes, racist literature and newspaper subscriptions.

Last October, a Portland jury found the Metzgers and their organization liable for the death of Muhsen Seraw, an Ethiopian who was beaten to death by three skinheads in November 1988. The civil judgment of $125.5 million was the largest in Oregon history.

The jury found that Metzger sent organizers to Portland to encourage young racists to commit violence against Jews and blacks.

STOCKTON, Calif. (AP) — In a record California criminal case, a dozen gang members were arraigned Monday on murder charges for a two weekend attack last summer that killed two people and wounded five others.

The members of the Bahala Nae, or "anything goes," Filipino youth gang have made history because never before have so many suspects been charged with first-degree murder in a single case, according to authorities.

Eight of the 12 accused could be sentenced to die.

Each of the 12 is charged with 20 counts of murder, attempted murder assault with a deadly weapon, mayhem, conspiracy, battery and other crimes — a total of 348 criminal counts. That also is a record for a single California murder case, according to authorities.

The trial, or trials if some of the defendants ask to be tried separately, could take up to a year and cost $1 million, local officials said.

Most of the modifications have been made to the vehicle's two-horsepower Briggs & Stratton engine, Graves said. "The engine has been highly modified for fuel efficiency and competition." The last race he participated in was in 1980 when it traveled 940 miles around a gallon, Graves said. The lightweight vehicle has a low-friction, foam-core fiberglass shell, a cromoly frame and weighs 110 pounds, he said.

The Super Mileage Team is sponsored by Champion Sparkplugs, Broad Street Bikes, Philips Machine Shop in San Luis Obispo and U.S. Chrome in Long Beach.

Graves said that the team is new this year and consists of students from different majors. Four of the 10 team members are in the mechanical engineering program.

The Super Mileage Vehicle, which has been in existence for the past three seasons, is one of four projects on which the automotive engineers club is working. Other projects include two mini-baja racers and a formula car.

The high-mileage vehicle, better known as the "SLOmobile," has three wheels, two in front for steering and one in the rear for propulsion and braking.

Police Chief Daryl F. Gates also recorded a video shown at officers' roll calls beginning Friday. The tape was released to the press Sunday. It showed a Gates saying all of his officers who were involved would be punished.

Gates said the beating tainted the department's good name and he encouraged his force to restore the public's trust in law enforcement.

Thousands of angry calls have flooded the Police Department and Mayor Tom Bradley's office. People have demanded Gates ouster, and Bradley has scrambled to calm the city and salvage its reputation.

U.S. District Judge Stanley Sporkin ordered the government last week not to sign any agreement with Exxon until he determines whether it would damage the rights of the five villages, which contend they are being illegally excluded from the negotiations.

The judge said yesterday at a hearing that he would lift his order and allow a settlement to be signed if both sides could agree on a court order intended to protect the rights of villages affected by the spill.

Such an order should declare that any agreement does not preclude the native Alaskans from pursuing their own claims against Exxon in Alaska state court, Sporkin said.

Air Force reservist and student Dave Taylor has a new reason to smile with the end of the Gulf war.

Dave Taylor was killed from finishing training at the Academy because of his towering six-foot-eight stature, which ironically also helped him to get into the Academy on a basketball scholarship.

"I left the Academy because I was too tall," Taylor said. "After a few years at the Academy they take two measurements, standing and sitting, to see if you're able to fit in a plane's cockpit. I didn't make either measurement. I was pretty far off," he said.

Taylor, like many others, is relieved to see an end to the fighting.

"The past few months have been very nerve-racking for me," he said. "It was very hard to keep my mind on anything, especially since Jan. 15, because I knew any moment I could pick up the phone and they could tell me I had to go.

"Now that the war is over I can breathe a sigh of relief for my friends from the Academy who are over there (in the gulf). I'm glad they are safe," Taylor said. "As far as me, of course I didn't want to go over. The idea of being in a war really scares me, but I also have some reticence. I felt like I had the obligation because of my training.

Taylor plans to continue with his busy schedule that includes classes at Cal Poly, coaching Templeton High School's boys' basketball team and working as a disk jockey on KJIM and RSTT radio stations.

From page 1 responsible for different sectors of campus. Using bikes and trailers, the students hauled recyclables from the barrels to a shed near Plant Operations.

Weekly, ECOSLO comes by to pick up the goods. Last year, ECOSLO picked up 1.6 tons of aluminum and 0.7 tons of bottles from CRC.

"We felt that bikes were the best and most environmentally conscious way to do it," Best said. "And we got noticed. People say, 'Hey, that looks neat.'"

But a movement into the south campus area will require more members — something that has worried the club in the past.

Last quarter, the group faced problems of support because several CRC members graduated. Best has wondered, at times, if there was enough help to keep the project going.

"I just want to have enough people to be prepared," he said. Recently, he is pleased with the influx of new members.

Money also worries Best, but a $28,000 state grant approved in early May has helped out.

When consumers do not collect on the California Redemption Value, the money goes into a fund that goes to state grants to encourage recycling.

CRC applied for state funds in January 1990, and the program was approved in early May. They signed a contract with the state detailing their next three quarters of operation.

Because the university does not have money to put into recycling, CRC has relied on some money from recycled cans and bottles for minimal publicity and club activities. The grant allowed them to buy more durable barrels, new trailers and tools.

The grant also has allowed them to delve into a larger publicity campaign. The club, along with Plant Operations, ECOSLO, University Paper Recycling Program and Foundation Food Services, has produced a recycling brochure.

"It's a really nice brochure," Best said. "Everything that can be recycled is in there."

Funding was one of the biggest issues at the Bay Area Recyclers conference in Berkeley two weekends ago. CRC was one of more than 40 organizations represented at the conference where ideas, successes and failures of various coalitions were shared. CRC member and Cal Poly soil science sophomore Amy Warren attended the event.

Warren said the discussions centered around recycling systems and the process of raising funds.

She was interested in the successes of other campuses.

"Other campuses have paid employees in their system," Warren said. "Stanford has a graduate degree in waste management."

Best admits that CRC's main responsibility is the pickup of recyclables but would like his group to find time for more environmental awareness programs.

One such plan is securing a more permanent recycling program throughout the residence halls. Best said dorm recycling is currently run by students, who use barrels sponsored by Housing Services. Some dorm governments are following through, he said, some are not.

CRC also takes part in recycling at Farmer's Market, San Luis Obispo Haze Society benefits and the Live Oak Folk Festival.

CRC meets Tuesdays at 6 p.m. in Science building (522), room E-28.
