ASI will let students decide on smoking in campus buildings

By Kelli Martin

Staff Writer

Despite a law prohibiting smoking in public buildings within San Luis Obispo city limits, Cal Poly students will get their chance next week to decide the fate of smoking in certain campus buildings.

The ASI Board of Directors voted unanimously Wednesday night to approve placement of a smoking regulation referendum on the 1994 Cal Poly general election ballot which would prohibit smoking in faculty offices.

The referendum, if passed, specifically stipulates that President Warren Baker and his staff take into consideration the effects of secondhand smoke and take action to prohibit smoking in all enclosed areas on the Cal Poly campus.

Cal Poly does not fall under city jurisdiction and is not mandated by city law because the land is state-owned, said Mark Denholm, ASI chairman of the board.

Last quarter, a similar resolution calling for the ban of tobacco sales on campus was written and submitted to the ASI Board of Directors by Dr. Stephen L. Hansen, representing the San Luis Obispo County Tobacco Control Committee.

Two-day open house showcases ag school

Last summer the School of Agriculture's Lemonade Committee began making lemonade from a lemon. A lemon was what the School of Agriculture called the cancellation of Poly Royal. And a lemonade committee was what the Lemonade Committee has become up with a cool and refreshing solution. Poly Agri View, "A Showcase of Agriculture and Education."

Poly Agri View is a two-day event designed to preserve some of the best activities, events and outreach of Poly Royal. A group of students and faculty called the Poly Agri View Committee, 32 clubs and nine departments within the School of Agriculture, are putting on the event.

The showcase begins on Friday, April 19 for more than 1,000 elementary and high school students who will be housed in local areas within an hour of San Luis Obispo. Poly is reserved exclusively for student guests, and each department within the School of Agriculture will be hosting a different grade.

One student hospitalized after bike-auto accident

Thursday's collision is the second such accident on campus in the last two days.

By Geoff Scriatti

A Cal Poly student was hospitalized with head injuries Thursday morning following a serious bike accident on campus involving another student driving a truck, Public Safety said.

The accident was the second bicycle-car collision involving students on campus in a 20-hour time period. Sgt. Bob Ambler, chief of Public Safety said this one, the latest accident, occurred at 8:55 a.m. at the entrance to the H-12 parking lot and Via Carta near the Farm Shop.

Civil engineering senior Walterio Lopez, 24, was driving north in a blue Mitsubishi truck when he tried to turn left to enter the parking lot. Elana Ambler, 22, was riding her bike south on Via Carta when she and the truck collided.

Schumacher said Ambler went flying off the bike and suffered a cut on the head as well as an injury to her right hand and wrist. A chain was taken by ambulance to Sierra Vista Regional Medical Center. Schumacher said she was not wearing a helmet.

Poly logging team 'rolls' over opponents

Club takes second place overall at Western Nationals competition.

Log rolling, ax throwing and power bucks chain saw events were a few of the feats the Cal Poly logging team took on at a regional competition last weekend.

Cal Poly placed second overall out of 15 other schools from a variety of Western states, said Colin Larson, logging club president. The Western Nationals competition is held annually by the Association of Western Forestry Clubs. This year's contest was held in Fort Collins, Colorado from April 4-6.

"Out of our 15 team members competing, 13 placed," said Larson, a natural resources management senior. "About half of us are NRM majors," he said, "but there are a lot of other majors that get involved too."

The logging club has 21 members, including four women. Two women and three men placed in the regional competition.

Cal Poly should not ban ROTC

ROTC should not be banned from Cal Poly. Despite the rabid-meeting of such groups as the GLBU and its rent-a-protester spokesperson Jan Perez, ROTC cadets and cadre have no say on Department of Defense policy making. The cadre are in the Reserve Officer Training Corps to better themselves physically, mentally and professionally. The cadre are Army officers taking time out of their careers to teach and to give something back to future Army officers. Whether or not the Army admits homosexuals is not up to Cal Poly or ROTC. The only function is to train future Army officers committed to defending our country. Completely not forced or coerced into ROTC, they take up their own free will. Let them do the job they joined to do. Having ROTC banned from Cal Poly will not change Department of Defense policy, it will just leave people who are willing to die for their country in the cold. Is this how we as a nation will not change Department of Defense policy?

The banner that says "We who live here will not be silent." is an example of an unnecessary program. The Gallerie, with a budget of over $100,000, is still over two years away. A project coordinator for the Rec Center will soon be hired, and there will be even more meeting/office space available. Moving the state's Disabled Students Services office to the new Student Services building would also provide additional space. The U.U. has the highest fee in the California State University system even before the Rec Center fee was added. One reason is the low rental income. The bookstore had a net profit of almost $700,000 last year, but pays little rent. The Foundation brought in over a million dollars last year from workshops and conferences. Many of those were held in the U.U., but there was only $17,000 in room rental income last year, and half of that was in June. The university administration uses the Gallerie for wine receptions and Chumash Auditorium for luncheons and other functions, but is not even paying enough to cover the custodial services. The Foundation could return the bookstore profits to the students, as Stanford University's foundation does. This would have meant an average of approximately $40 per student returned last year. Since it is unlikely that the Foundation is going to return the money to the students or stop overcharging for re­quired textbooks, it could at least pay fair rental rates and share some of the costs that the students are being asked to cover.

Last year, the Foundation put over $300,000 from bookstore profits into its building fund, but the students have to pay for the Rec Center, U.U., and the Children's Center from their U.U. and ASI fees. Last year, the上报 election for U.S. Senators was much bigger than the Rec Center. Rep. Bob Filner's office was promoting his "Red Alert" to sell a slity of entertainment purposes and does not represent an endorsement by the publisher or editor on any purchases made by readers in Room 228 of the Graphic Arts Building, Cal Poly University, San Luis Obispo, CA 93407.

The CSU Board of Trustees auditor's November 1989 report stated, "The San Luis Obispo union's current per student square footage of 7.89 square feet behind Humboldt (8.89) as the second largest per capita facility among 17 CSU unions." The CSU average is 4.32 square feet per student. It also found that the union's portion of the Rec Center will increase to 9.5 square feet per student to 10.52, exceed­ing even San Diego State's scheduled in­crease to 9.86 square feet. Nevertheless, management wants to expand the U.U. by ad­ding an annex or a third floor. The Feb. 4, 1991 Mustang Daily reported that "The approximate 14,000 extra square feet would include meeting space for 300 cam­pus clubs, a lounge for studying and some of­fice space." However, the U.U. gained over 3,000 square feet of office space when the Foundation moved into its new building. When Rec Sports moves to the new Rec Center, there will be even more meeting/office space available. Controversial whaling fleet kills 327 whales

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's whaling fleet has returned from the Antarctic Ocean after killing 327 whales as part of a research program opposed by environmentalists, officials said today.

Japanese officials say they hope the expedition, which ended Tuesday, will convince the International Whaling Commission that there are enough minke whales to allow a limited resumption of commercial whaling.

Controversy surrounds the whaling industry. The meat from the whales killed in the Southern Hemisphere is sold to restaurants in Japan, but Japan is the world's largest consumer of whale meat, officials said today.

Road race, criterium highlight Cal Poly Classic this weekend

By Michael Belgard
Staff Writer

The Cal Poly Classic rides again this Saturday and Sunday. Riders from across the state will converge on Crestron for a road race over a 32-mile loop on Saturday. Sunday the riders will move to Cal Poly for a criterium race around the residence halls.

Racing will take place in six divisions, four men's and two women's.

Race director Mimi Karl, an engineering technology junior, said that the Sunday criterium promises to be an exhibition of speed. Meanwhile, the road course will pose unique challenges for the riders, Karl said.

"There are a number of steep climbs on the course, and to ensure that the pace will remain fast, a valuable 'Ring of the Mountain' points prize will be placed at the top of the steepest hill. In addition, a 'hot spot' points sprint will be placed on a flat section of the course," Karl said.

The Cal Poly Wheelmen are currently atop the Western Collegiate Cycling Conference standings.

In the men's A division, seniors Todd Hower, a physical education senior, and Rich Keenan, a mechanical engineering senior, are among the favorites, said Esteban Chavez, English freshman and Wheelman racer. Biological sciences junior Nicole Amorali and Karl are among the favorites in the women's A division.

Racing will begin on Saturday at 11 a.m. along Highways 58, 41 and 229 as well as O'Donovan and La Panza Roads. Sunday's racing will get underway at 9 a.m. around the South Mountain dorms, known as the 'red brick' dorms.

Volunteers are needed to serve as course marshals to ensure the safety of riders and spectators. Anyone interested can call Neil Trainer at 543-0693. Refreshments will be provided for volunteers.

the research is sold commercially.

In July, Japan, Norway and Iceland tried unsuccessfully to convince the commission to exclude minke, a relatively abundant smaller species, from a worldwide moratorium on commercial whaling.

The commission imposed the moratorium in 1986 to allow scientists to study whale stocks without the disruptions caused by whaling.

Japan officially halted its commercial whaling at the end of the 1986-87 season, when it caught 1,941 whales. It then began a program of research whaling, which under the commission charter can be conducted by members at any time.

Top-ranked UCLA wallops men's tennis, 6-0

Marc Ollivier's four-set loss is only bright spot in an otherwise one-sided match.

The Mustangs men's tennis team visited the Bruins' den on Tuesday and were clawed. UCLA won the match 6-0 in Los Angeles.

UCLA, the No. 1 team in the country in Division I, played dropped the Mustangs' overall season record to 0-8. UCLA's record is now 24-1 for the season.

Mustang Coach Kevin Platt said the only bright spot for the team was No. 5 singles player Marc Ollivier. Ollivier extended the Bruins' Bobby Wendell to play a fourth set before bowing out, 6-7 (7-4), 7-5, 6-1.

Platt said Ollivier played really well and had a match point on Wendell. In the second set, Ollivier was ahead 5-4, 40-30 in the 10th game. Platt said Wendell then hit a couple of really good shots to pull out the second set.

Ollivier went up a break in the third set but came up short.

Platt said UCLA played exceptionally well and except for Ollivier's contest, the other players' matches were pretty rough.

The other five singles matches all ended in straight-set victories for the Bruins. At No. 1 singles, UCLA's Jason Netter defeated Eric Basa 6-1, 6-1; at No. 2 David Nankin beat Alex Havrilienko 6-1, 6-2; No. 3 singles Jason Silver defeated Max Allman 6-1, 6-2; No. 4 Billy Barber beat Mark Nielsen 6-0, 6-3 and at No. 6 singles UCLA's Matt Quinlan defeated Ricardo Reyes 6-1, 6-3.

Platt said UCLA got off to a good start. "They were really focused and never let us get into the match." To compound the problem Platt said the Mustangs didn't get off to a great start.

"The match scores indicate the Mustang's players may have been in awe of the Bruins," Platt said. "Our guys were a little nervous and maybe a little intimidated by UCLA."

Since UCLA had already defeated Ricardo Reyes 6-1, 6-3.

"We will need $9,000 to $11,000 to run the nationals," Larson said. The team is looking for a new training area. They are currently using what they call "the horse stables."

Technical events like tree and plant identification are also a part of the competition," Larson said. One course involves guessing the diameter, height and species of trees without using any instruments.

Another event was the power-chain saw race. It is a timed throw contest. "At midnight the Ams are served!"

We are catering to the local students this year," said Sabol, assistant dean for the School of Agriculture and the events adviser. "We want them to look at Cal Poly as an option for their school and for their career."

Each department will spend two hours with their group of students in planned activities and events.

The agricultural education department is taking 400 kindergarten students through second-grade students on a "farm tour" of the animal units and crop areas, while ornamental horticulture has 200 sixth- and seventh-graders that will be guided through 34 learning displays of horticulture.

High school students will spend their day with computers in agricultural engineering or marketing techniques in agricultural business.

Sabol said the learning experience these students will receive will show them that there is more to agriculture than a hard day's work in the field.

"When we start with young children, we're setting the stage for a long-term education program," Sabol said. "We want these students to come back next year and keep coming back to learn more.

After the two-hour program, students will eat a bag lunch with milk provided by the school and then go to activities such as a rodeo that teaches techniques and concern for general animal welfare, or a tractor traction demonstration.

Saturday, April 20 is an open house for the whole community. Invitations have been sent out to parents, alumni, new students and special guests within the agricultural industry.

The day will include displays, shows and tours of the departments and their activities. From a horse show to applewood-making, a community flower show and logging demonstrations, the day is full of events for everyone.

And of course, the traditional food booths and barbecues will be there.

We are very pleased that Dr. Baker has allowed schools such as the School of Agriculture to have open houses this year," Sabol said.

"We are going to do some effective recruiting, some excellent publicity relations, and we are going to teach a lot of people a lot of good things about agriculture," he said.

Sabol said preparation for Poly Agri View has been an opportunity for leadership and creativity for the students. The Poly Agri View Committee has worked around the clock, he said, to make this a very special event.

Dendrie Floyd, an agricultural business sophomore is one of the three student co-chairpersons for the committee. She said the School of Agriculture is looking forward to educating students and the community.

"Now we can show off what we do," she said.

very intense. My relationship with Mike is much more laid back. If there's a problem, we don't take it personally. We're not afraid to hash it out."

Like Kunzelman, many women who are living in both all-female and mixed groups claim that men are more relaxed and easier to live with than women. But whether this is because men are "better" roommates is questionable. "Women may be more accepting of male roommates' drawbacks, because they're men," says Adele Coed.

A nurse at Sierra Vista said Thursday afternoon that Ambler was released Thursday morning after receiving treatment which included stitches for her head injury. The other accident involving a bike and automobile happened Wednesday at 3:05 p.m. Schumacher said aeronautical engineering freshman Matthew Trevisan, 19, was riding his bike downhill on North Perimeter in front of the Faculty Office Building when he collided with a Honda Accord attempting to make a U-turn. The driver of the car was Leanne Monovick, 18. Schumacher said Trevisan tried to swerve out of the way but hit the left front side of the car and went flying off the bike. Trevisan suffered a cut on his left hand and scraped the left knee. Trevisan was taken to the Health Center. Schumacher said Trevisan also was not wearing a helmet. Schumacher said, “The weather is nice so everyone is riding bikes, and people should be aware of wearing helmets. The law doesn’t require a helmet, but it is advantageous to have one especially if (a bicyclist is) hit by a car.”

Schumacher said there are very few bike accident reports on campus that indicate the bicyclist was wearing a helmet. Schumacher said since Public Safety put in a no-bikes rule on Inner Perimeter Road, there have been no accidents in that area. “We appreciate everyone’s cooperation in complying with that rule. It has made the area a much safer place,” Schumacher said. He also said Public Safety wants to remind bicycle riders that they have to adhere to all the rules of the road that apply to vehicles.
