Poly Canyon now closed to bikers, cyclists

By Gabrielle Friedly
Staff Writer

Many mountain bikers must now look for a new place to ride after a sign was posted at the entrance to Poly Canyon that reads “Motorcycles and Bicycles Prohibited Beyond This Sign.”

Associate Dean of Agriculture Larry Rathbun said the motivation for the signs began about a month ago when the agriculture department was having difficulty keeping mountain bikers off the unmarked trails, which are owned by the university.

Lieutenant Leroy Whitmer at Public Safety said it is unclear if the sign will stop the biking, but other measures will be put into effect. “If it continues to be a problem, we will patrol the area and issue citations,” he said.

Rathbun said, “The bikes have destroyed the grass covers, which caused erosion when the rains came.”

“The animal science department alone has spent more than $500 in student labor, regrouping the cattle because of goats that were left open,” he said. “One breeding cycle was also lost when some cows came.”

Women's Week examines well-being, health issues

■ Cal Poly's 10th annual program is being supported by California State Lottery funds.

By Christie Rinsuro
Staff Writer

The spiritual, physical and social well-being of women will be explored in a range of activities during Cal Poly's 10th annual Women's Week.

"Women's Health and Wholeness: Whose Prescription?" is the central theme for next week's activities. The program, presented by Cal Poly's Center for Women and Ethnic Issues, is financially supported by California State Lottery funds.

Last September, many Cal Poly female students, staff and faculty volunteers formed a planning committee that selected a program of traditional and nontraditional methods for developing well-being. The result of their efforts is the first program in Women's Week history dealing with health as a central theme.

"We're trying to get women to begin to assess how they define being healthy and why we use those specific parameters about what is healthy and what is not. We want to know how we internalize messages about what healthy is," said Willi Coleman, director of the Center for Women and Ethnic Issues.

Coleman said women's health is a national issue, and through Women's Week, Cal Poly is trying to bring awareness to these issues.

"That's what a university is supposed to do. It should keep you in contact with the real world and its issues," she said.

Women's Week planners hope to educate participants through a variety of lectures, discussion panels, workshops and films held daily in the University Union.

"We hope that participants begin to consider a healthy self as a combination of physical, mental and well-being," Coleman said. "It's like to see all of us assume responsibility for being healthy persons."

Coleman said the responsibility of becoming a healthy person should stem from wanting to prevent problems rather than searching for solutions once a problem surfaces.

"Poly students get a ‘worldly’ education"

Many students wait until after graduation to travel around the world. Senior biology student Donna Barrett, found a way to combine school and a year of travel.

"G'Day mate" was one of many things she got used to hearing, spending a year of school "Aussie" style. Barrett was one of three students from the California State University system to be chosen to study at Queensland University near Brisbane, Australia. The opportunity was made possible through International Programs, a CSU-sponsored organization.

IP has study opportunities in 17 different countries, said Lisa Bosakowski, a campus counselor.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Poly Canyon should be open

I am writing this letter over the recent closing of Poly Canyon to mountain bikers. The first thing that alarms me about closing the canyon is why was it closed? Erosion should not be the reason for this decision. The present massive erosion was caused by the recent March rains and could have been reduced through better management, i.e. keeping culverts clean and cutting, reconstruction. Also, it seems odd that bicycles are banned when horses are not. Horses cause erosion too.

The second thing that bothers me about closing the canyon, is why was it closed to mountain bikers? Possibly because they are causing wear and tear on Poly Canyon to mountain bikes. The third thing that ir­ri­mates me about closing Poly Canyon to bicycles is that the issue of hikers and joggers has not been addressed. In the past, cyclists have been accused of leaving the canyon gates open, resulting in the overgrowthing of sheep. Those on foot are just as likely as those on mountain bikes to leave gates open.

Over the past few years, I have come to depend on moun­tain hiking in Poly Canyon for exercise and stress relief. I will miss the beauty of the canyon, the smell of the wildflowers and the feeling of a good workout. Too bad my knees cannot stand up to the punish­ment of jogging, as I would still be able to enjoy the outdoors and exercise in Poly Canyon.

REPORTER’S NOTEBOOK

Academic Senate should have removed Poly’s ROTC program

By Ellen Clary

On April 16, 1991, the Academic Senate voted to amend the statewide resolution to remove ROTC programs because they discriminate against gays. The amendment basically states that while we agree with the intention of the original resolution stating that ROTC discrim­inates, it will allow ROTC to remain on campus.

I am deeply disappointed that the Academic Senate chose to amend the resolution in this fashion. The primary argument for the amend­ment was that it would hurt the Cal Poly stu­dents that benefit from the ROTC program.

What’s puzzling about this argument is that there are less than 80 students currently en­rolled in the ROTC program. On a campus of 16,000, that is less than 0.5 percent of the stu­dents. The ROTC program refuses to allow gays and bisexuals to gain any of the financial benefits associated with its program. The percentage of gay students is roughly 10 percent. The percentage of bisexual students is essentially unknown, but according to informal studies is probably much higher than the gay population. The Academic Senate ruled in favor of a program that helps only a few students and dis­criminates against a large number of them.

One possible argument for keeping ROTC on campus is that the students in ROTC are academically superior to other students and gives credibility to Cal Poly’s high academic stan­dards, but there is no evidence to support this argument. Rumor has it, in fact, that precisely the reverse is true. Keep in mind that Cal Poly is an oversubscribed campus that turns away a large number of students each year.

What’s odd about the whole issue is that there really isn’t an issue. The Cal State Univer­sity system’s and the University of California’s nondiscriminatory policies prohibit discrimi­nation on the basis of sexual orientation. ROTC, a branch of the Department of Defense, clearly discriminates on that basis. Also remember that the statewide Academic Senate’s vote was unanimous in favor of the resolution. They obviously didn’t think there was an issue.

Voting to support an organization that is in conflict with a particular policy only weakens that policy overall. Jeopardizing the entire non­discriminatory policy makes Cal Poly’s theme of “unity through diversity” and casts a growing shadow on the university’s already shaky reputation for not encouraging minority enroll­ment.

Rather than benefiting Cal Poly, maintaining the ROTC program will ultimately hurt the university’s reputation, and that is a liability that Cal Poly hardly needs.
U.S. presence in Iraq shrinks to buffer zone

SAPFWAN, Iraq (AP) — The U.S. military presence in southern Iraq shrunk to a narrow buffer zone along the Kuwaiti border Wednesday.

For the first time, meanwhile, U.S. soldiers entered northern Iraq to look for sites that will serve as camps for Kurdish refugees. The Pentagon said U.S., French and British troops would build tent cities and provide food and medical care for the Kurds.

At the southern buffer zone, the field commander in charge of the 18,000 soldiers of the 3rd Armored Division said they would feed and protect refugees in the area until relief agencies can take over the work.

Protesters march for democratic changes

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — About 20,000 protesters marched through downtown Taipei today chanting support for opposition demands for swifter democratic reforms and direct presidential elections.

Later, about 200 rock-throwing demonstrators clashed with riot police in the Taipei suburb of Shihlin when police tried to disperse them.

Four police vans were smashed and some protesters were injured, witnesses said. Police said details of the clash was not immediately available.

Earlier, Huang Han-chih, chairman of the Democratic Progressive Party, told the crowd: "We need to show our people power to the Nationalists so we can have a bright democratic future.

The cars were completely full, and normally they're half full," said Bill Edmiston, a faton salesman who regularly takes a Bay Area Rapid Transit District train from Fruitvale in Oakland to his job in San Francisco. "No one seemed disturbed."

Local agencies braced for the worst commuter disaster in the nation as about 21,000 commuters who rely on CalTrain on the San Francisco Peninsula had to find another way to get to work as rail workers stayed off the job and set up pickets at stations.

Maryland mail service rates nation's slowest

MARYLAND (AP) — The U.S. Postal Service announced Tuesday that Maryland mail service ranked nation's slowest.

The Postal Service said it would begin delivering mail faster in Maryland, where the average delivery time is more than 10 days longer than the national average.

The rating was based on a study of mail delivery times in the state, which showed that mail is delivered to more than 90 percent of customers in less than two days.

The Postal Service said it was working to improve service in Maryland and other areas where mail delivery times are slower.

Stock market closes at 3,000 for first time

NEW YORK (AP) — Predictions of a healthier economy and a steady investor zeal for stocks sent the Dow Jones industrial average soaring Wednesday to close at an all-time high.

The Dow average of 30 industrial stocks closed at 3,064.46, up 17.58 points, breaking the previous record of 3,069.75 on July 16 and 17, 1990.

Other indexes that track the wider market, such as the Standard & Poor's 500 and Nasdaq composite index, have closed in record territory in recent weeks.

"Every other market has been making new highs for close to two weeks," said Peter Vandenberg, market analyst for Lehman Brothers Inc. "The Dow has been lagging the market for quite awhile."

National rail walkout causes few problems

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Thousands of Northern Californians jammed express buses, car pools and mass transit on the first day of a national rail strike Wednesday, but there were few complaints.

"The cars were completely full, and normally they're half full," said Bill Edmiston, a faton salesman who regularly takes a Bay Area Rapid Transit District train from Fruitvale in Oakland to his job in San Francisco. "No one seemed disturbed."

Local agencies braced for the worst commuter disaster in the nation as about 21,000 commuters who rely on CalTrain on the San Francisco Peninsula had to find another way to get to work as rail workers stayed off the job and set up pickets at stations.

Committee would let parents care for kids

Sacramento (AP) — The Assembly Labor and Employment Committee says that working parents should get time off to care for children or other family members.

"We live in a society where most children live in a family with a single parent or both parents working," said Terry Friedman, D-Los Angeles, author of AB77. "It's like putting spurs to a dinosaur."

Seven Maryland counties practically in a family with a single parent or both parents care for kids.

The committee voted Wednesday 6-2 for Friedman's AB1546, which would require employers who have sick leave policy to let workers use it to care for their sick children.

The committee voted 6-2 for AB77 by Gwen Moore, D-Los Angeles. It would require 25-employee or larger companies to let workers take unpaid leave of up to four months to care for family members.

Poly rugby club prescribes pasta for primo power

The Cal Poly rugby team will be competing in the Pacific Coast Championships this weekend at Stanford. The three-day event starts Friday and concludes on Sunday. Eight teams are competing in the tournament, and the winner will head to Texas for the nationals.

Cal Poly, with its record of 7-0-1, is seeded first and will take on Stanford in the first round. Cal Poly's southern rival, Long Beach, also has a record of 7-0-1. "We scored more points over the season than Long Beach, so we have the first seed," said Roark Schultz, Cal Poly's outside center. "Our only tie of the season is with Long Beach, and we hope to finish that game in the finals."

Schultz said that Cal Poly's strategy is to play each game like it's the final. "We're going to take the first game hard and set the tone for the tournament."

As director for the program, "It's different from London Study in that you actually attend a foreign university and study with students from that country," she said.

All classes taken through the program transfer back to Cal Poly.

"You don't have to worry about classes not transferring or accumulating as elective units," she said.

To be eligible, students must be in their junior year by the time they depart. A 2.75 GPA is required. Each overseas university offers only certain courses of study to IP students.
This limits people to particular countries, depending on their major.

Germany, Spain and France are the only countries that have language requirements, Boosakowski said.

Queensland University offers only a marine biology program IP students.

"The school is geared towards marine biology because of its prime location," Barrett said.
"I got to study all about the Great Barrier Reef in my classes and then actually go out and see it."

She also spent time checking out the beaches, scuba diving and swimming with dolphins.

Barrett had such an excellent time that she wasn't ready to come home. "Australians are really friendly people with good attitudes," she said. "You know,
'No worries mate.'" Barrett is returning to the Southern Hemisphere this summer as a tour group leader. She is taking 30 Cal Poly students to Fiji, New Zealand and Australia.

The trip, organized through the ASI Travel Center, begins June 19 and will last for three weeks. Return tickets will be left open so that people who wish to continue traveling will have that option.

It's less expensive to study in New Zealand for a year than to stay at Cal Poly, Boosakowski
said.

"A lot of people don't realize this is an economical trip," she said. "The exchange rate and cost of living make the difference."

Matt Kritscher, a recreation administration senior, found this out for himself. Kritscher was one of eight Cal Poly students who spent a year at Lincoln University in Christchurch, New Zealand.

School in New Zealand involves more independent research, Kritscher said. "You don't really get textbooks," he said. "You have to look up everything in the library."

Once school was out, Kritscher stayed an extra quarter to live on his own. He stayed in a flat with friends and supported himself by playing in a band and performing in local pubs. He also hitchhiked around the country for 700 miles.

"There's freedom to go and explore," he said. "It's one of the few countries in the world that's safe to hitchhike in anymore."

Both Barrett and Kritscher studied in university dorms. It was fun getting to be around Australians all the time," Barrett said. Living in a flat or with a family is also an option, depending on the university.

The program does not charge an overseas tuition or ad-maintenance costs. Students pay regular Cal Poly fees. The application due date for most IP countries is Feb. 1. "Because Australia and New Zealand are in a different hemisphere, they go to school from February to November," Boosakowski said.

The deadline for any students interested in those two countries is May.

"It was neat meeting people from all over the world," Barrett said. "Now my address book is filled with many different countries — wherever I go now I have a friend."
Students to display 'angry' photos in Powerhouse Gallery exhibition

By Amy Koval
Staff Writer

A cutting-edge photography exhibit of works by Cal Poly students Jay Swanson and Dave Carnie is scheduled to open April 20 at Cal Poly.

The exhibit, called "Popside Never Knew Bullet," will feature conceptual work including three-dimensional pieces, photographic collages and assemblages.

Swanson and Carnie call their work anti-commercial, and one of their art instructors says their work is "angry." They tend to use "violent" subject matter such as razor blades or industrial scenes.

Both Carnie and Swanson are majoring in art with concentrations in photography and in sculpture.

They feel there's a gap between the worlds of art and photography that needs to be bridged. Carnie opened reception will be held at 6 p.m. on April 20, and the show will run through May 4. The Powerhouse Gallery is located on South Perimeter Road across from the Student Services building.

Guitar Shorty to flip and spin in blues gig

By Geoff Seratti
Staff Writer

Blues guitarist Guitar Shorty will flip out on stage Saturday in San Luis Obispo.

The 51-year-old blues great will be performing his wild stage antics at the San Luis Obispo Veterans Hall. The concert is being hosted by the San Luis Obispo Blues Society.

Shorty grew up in Florida and started playing the guitar at age nine. He has recorded with many blues greats, including Muddy Waters, Ray Charles, Sam Cooke and B.B. King.

But besides the powerful music Shorty puts out, his guitar fees come for the wild stage antics. Jack Levin of the Sanimeon Blue Society said, "Shorty's mesmerizing stage show includes forward flips, headstands, floor windmills, playing behind his head, with his teeth, one handed at arms length and while drugging the guitar behind him - all done while pouring out powerful guitar solos."

Follow bluesman Guitar Slim led Shorty to try doing moves out on stage. Shorty first tried the flips at a club in Hallumville. Art show remembers the forgotten children of war

By Anne McMahon

The drawings by children from Nicaragua, El Salvador, Panama and Guatemala which are part of the exhibit, "Voices of the Children — Voces de los Ninos," portray a powerful message.

Their art illustrates the violence, killing and suffering the children have witnessed. Photographs of children living under the war in Central America, taken by Taro Yamashiki and Bryan Karl Lathrop, complete the exhibit.

Most of the drawings were done by Nicaraguan and Salvadoran orphans, but there are also two each from Panama and Guatemalan orphans. They show scenes of bullets streaming to the ground, dead bodies and burning houses and churches.

There is an eerie similarity — a shared experience — present in many of the drawings which cannot be attributed to the vivid imagination of a child.

"The content of the drawings is too atrocious for any child to ever have to imagine or endure," said Yamasaki. "Many of the children have witnessed things that no child should experience for years, and it somehow manages to surface out of the surrounding devastation.

Many capture a sense of the spirited, carefree and innocent reality that, in a perfect world, all children would experience. Others, particularly the black and white shots taken in what appears to be a hospital, portray more pain and hopelessness than one cannot comfortably observe for long. They are a sad reminder that life today is far from perfect for many children.

Throughout April, the month of the child, several San Luis Obispo locations will be hosting portions of the exhibit which began a two-year national tour in January. The Central Coast visit of "Voices of the Children — Voces de los Ninos" is sponsored by Friends of MADRE and Mothers For Peace. The tour is sponsored by MADRE, a project of Women's Peace Network, Inc. of New York.

Portions of the exhibit can be seen at the County Courthouse (second floor) and San Luis Obispo City Hall (chamber foyer), weekdays, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; at the Children's Museum, Friday through Sunday, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.; and at Central Coast Plaza, weekdays 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., Saturday 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., and Sunday 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Poly student to dance in benefit for the homeless

By Cindy Lee Staff Writer

"My talent is in my feet, not in my fingers," Christy Martinez said. After taking piano lessons for three years and hating every scale of it, Martinez struck a bargain with her mom, then traded in her piano bench for ballet shoes.

"I can't imagine not having it," she said. "I dance three to five nights a week."

Martinez' passion for dance is growing. In February, she joined up with the San Luis Obispo Academy of Dance. For the past few months, Martinez has been practicing for the academy's summer tour.

Most of Martinez' practice includes several small shows at Furnari's Market and the upcoming special performance, Children Dance For World Improvement.

The show will be held April 20 at 1 p.m. at the Mission.

The performance will include popular pieces by Janet Jackson, Bobby Brown and Vanilla Ice.

The performance is free and open to the public. Donations of canned food are welcome and will be given to the Grassroots organization of San Luis Obispo.

"Anyone and everyone is welcome," Garritano said. "It's a free and easy way to clean out your cupboards and have a good time all in one."

Martinez plans to stay at Cal Poly next year to get her teaching credential. Although Martinez has no plans to go on to dance professionally, she would never stop dancing, she said. She hopes to incorporate dance into her lessons with her grammar school students when she begins teaching.

"One thing balances out the other," she said. "When you get burned out on school or your job, you just take a break and dance."

Three days of exertion, ag­ these guys eat? "You can't eat right before a game," Schultz said. "You need to eat 1/2 an hour before."

"Carbohydrates."

"I also eat Micro

Schultz is ready, the team is ready. "We're going to show them

Spaghetti Sauce

- 1 tsp. oregano
- 1/2 tsp. basil
- 1/2 tsp. marjoram
- 1 Tbl. olive oil
- 1 can (8 oz.) tomato sauce
- 3/4 stick of butter for the last 10 minutes.

Add the seasonings one at a time, tasting to see which you want more or less.

In a large pot, heat the olive oil and add the onion and garlic.
Simmer for four minutes. Don't boil the onions.

Heat until the sauce just comes to a boil. Reduce heat to low. Cover the sauce in the skillet on medium low for 15 minutes.

Get ready for a whale of a time, tasting to see which you add to the sauce in the skillet. We're going to show them that we're not mocking about."

Bikes

From page 1 were exposed to the wrong bull.
Douglas Gerad, executive dean of facilities administration, said there has been an increase in activity with mountain bikes among students.

"People have total disregard to the ecology of the area," he said. "There have been some cases of riders chasing animals and people committing damage to pregnant cattle. The behavior patterns are just unacceptable."

Engineering professor Ben Patrick, who was bicycling with a friend near Poly Canyon on Tuesday, said he opposed the signs prohibiting biking.

He said, "They are not solving the problem, just creating a problem. The signs aren't going to stop it."

Patrick said they can fix the problem of stray cows by simply locking or putting springs on the gates.

Reblathon said, "In no way are we trying to blame the students for the problem." He hopes that the signs will provoke a public meeting to work out the problem in a sensible manner.

Gerad said that they are willing to take into consideration "an organization that will step forward to help solve the problem."

"It is an unfortunate situation because there are a lot of responsible riders," Gerad said.

Mary Mithbrandt, a landscape architecture senior said, "Education is the answer, not restriction."

"We had to protect the environment," Gerad said. "I will certainly entertain another proposal that is brought to my attention."
